

First, we're going to play a game about faces!

Look at these different faces:

This one is really mean.

This one is a little mean.

This one is kind of mean and kind of nice.

This one is a little nice.

This one is really nice.

So let's think about if you were on the swings and someone pushed you off. So that's really mean, right? Can you point to the face that's really mean?

Now let's think about if someone brought in ONE cupcake and then decided to share that with you.

So that's really nice, right? Can you point to the face that's really nice?

M1: Now let's think about if someone called you a bad name. How nice is that person? Can you point to a face?

M2: Now let's think about if someone took all of the play-doh you were playing with. How nice is that person? Can you point to a face?

N1: Now let's think about if you were really thirsty, but you spilled your water, and someone brought you a new cup of water. How nice is that person? Can you point to a face?

N2: Now let's think about if someone bought you a really nice present for your birthday. How nice is that person? Can you point to a face?

Okay great, we're done with the face game.

Now we're going to play another game where I'll tell you a cool, fun story.

Script:

MEAN STORY

Oh so the person is __? Let's think again if you were on a swing and got pushed off - that would really hurt. And you would feel really bad. So pushing you off the swing is really mean, right? [point]

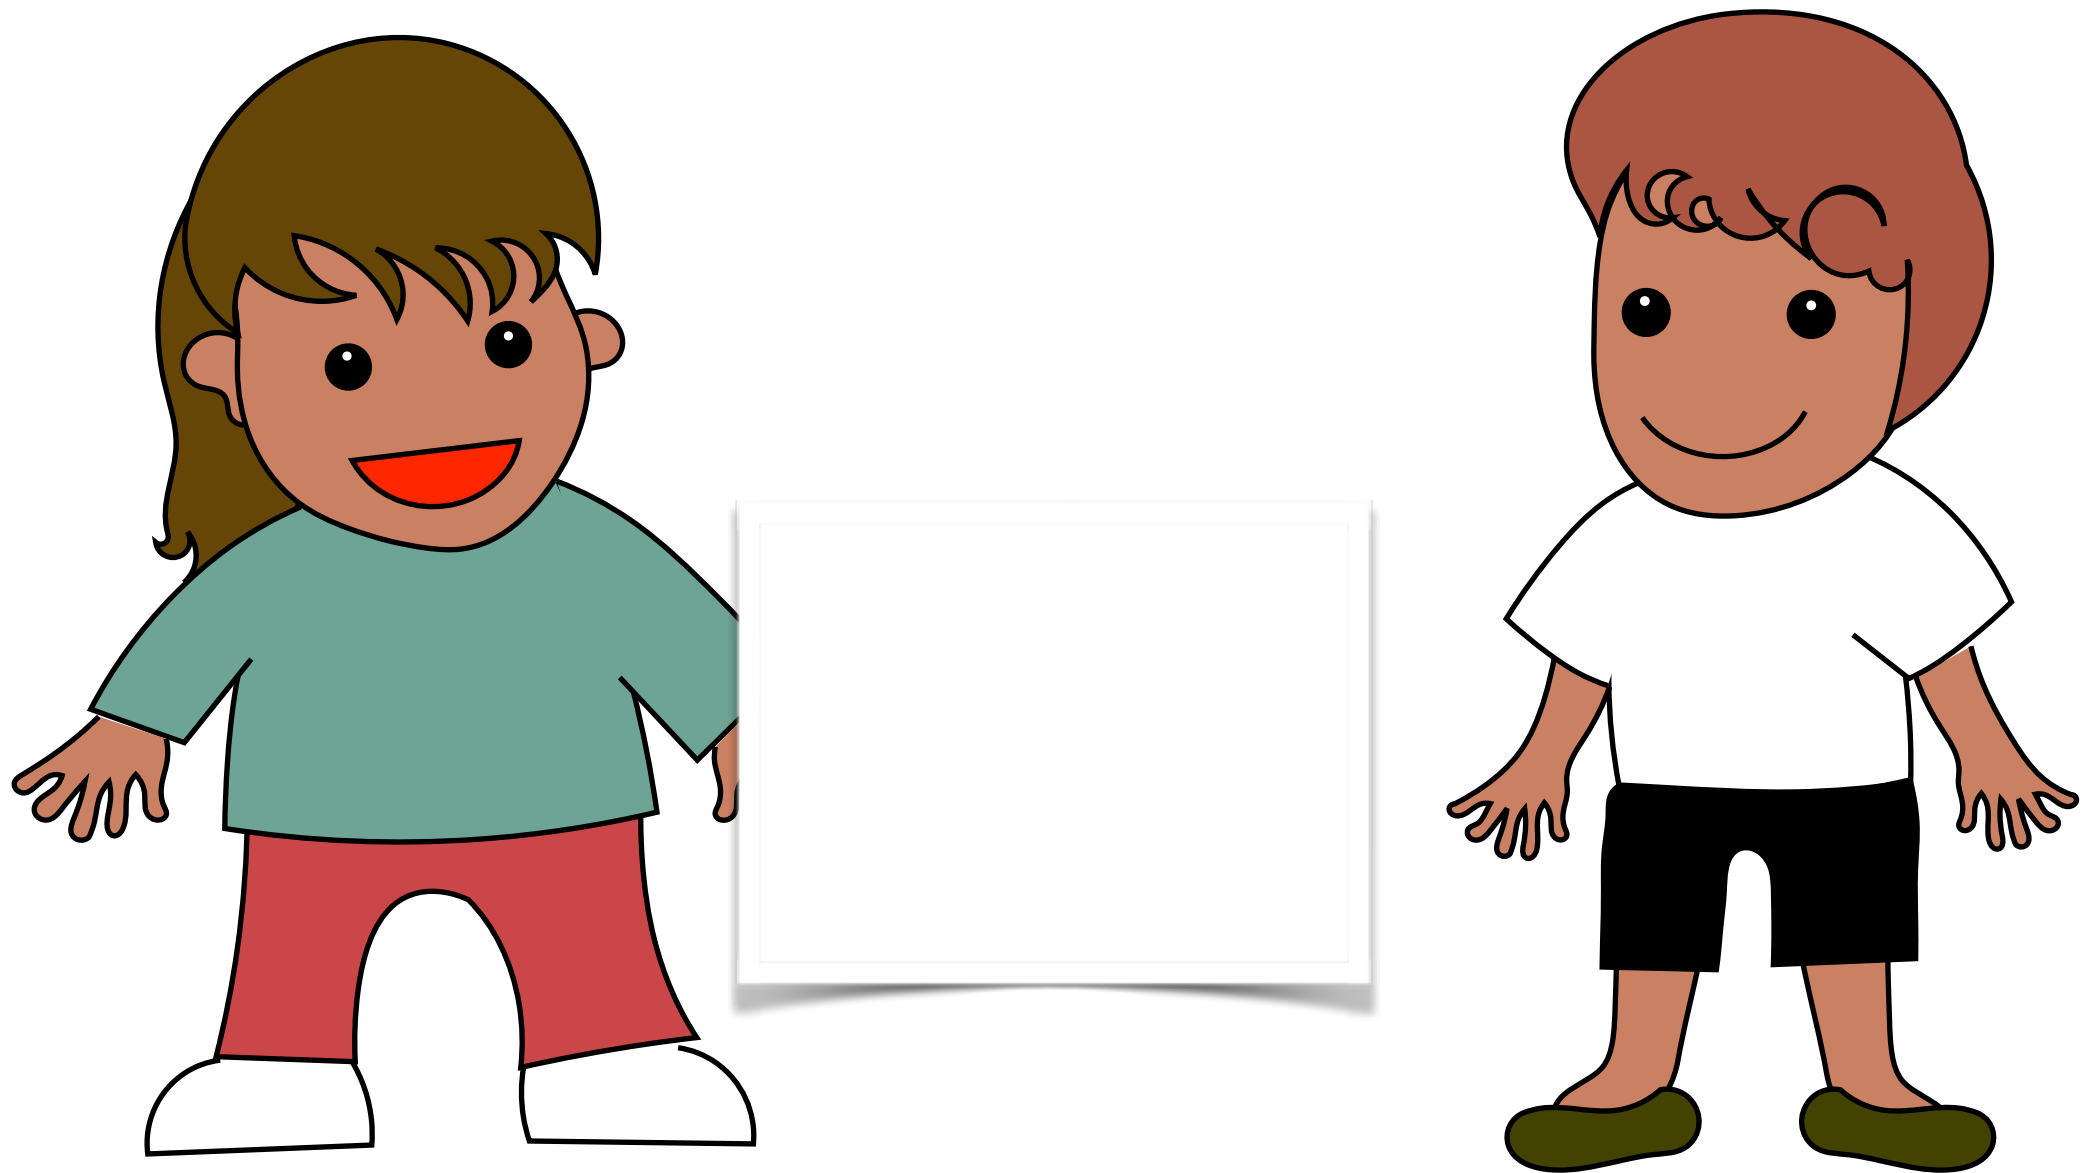

So that was really mean...

Oh so the person is __? Let's think again if someone brought in only ONE cupcake for only ONE person to eat, and then decided to share that cupcake with you. You would feel really good. So sharing that cupcake is really nice, right? [point]

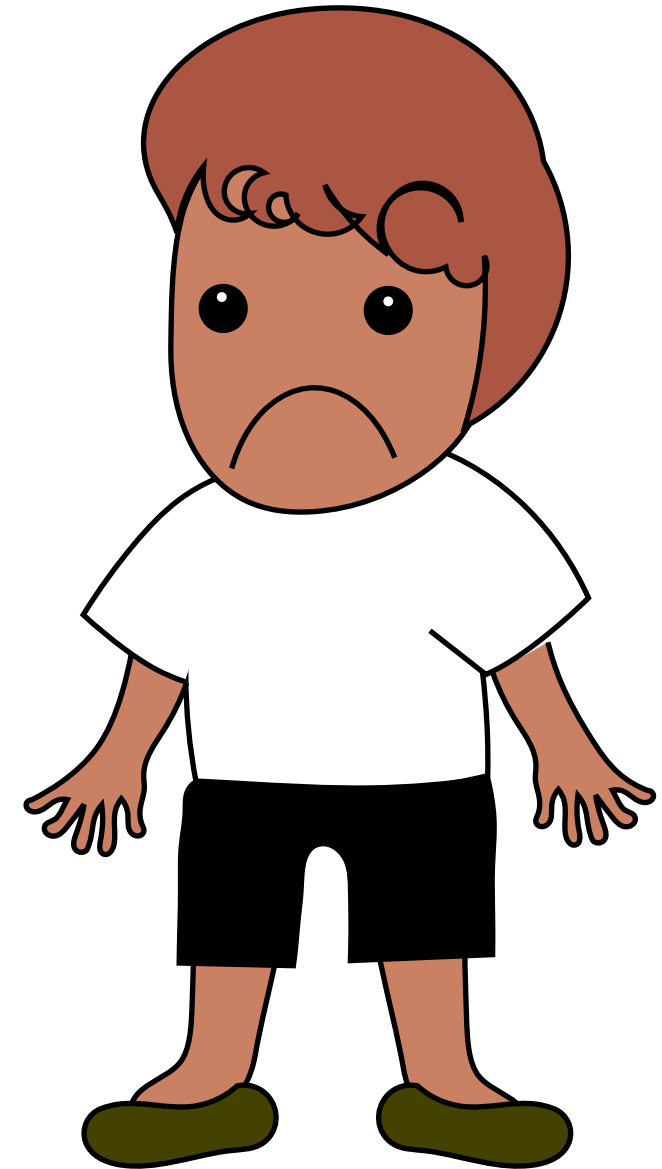

Look, this is Heather!
One day, Heather decided to draw a picture of her friend.

Heather brought her drawing to school and met her friend Stanley.
Heather said to her friend Stanley,
“Here, look at my drawing of you!”

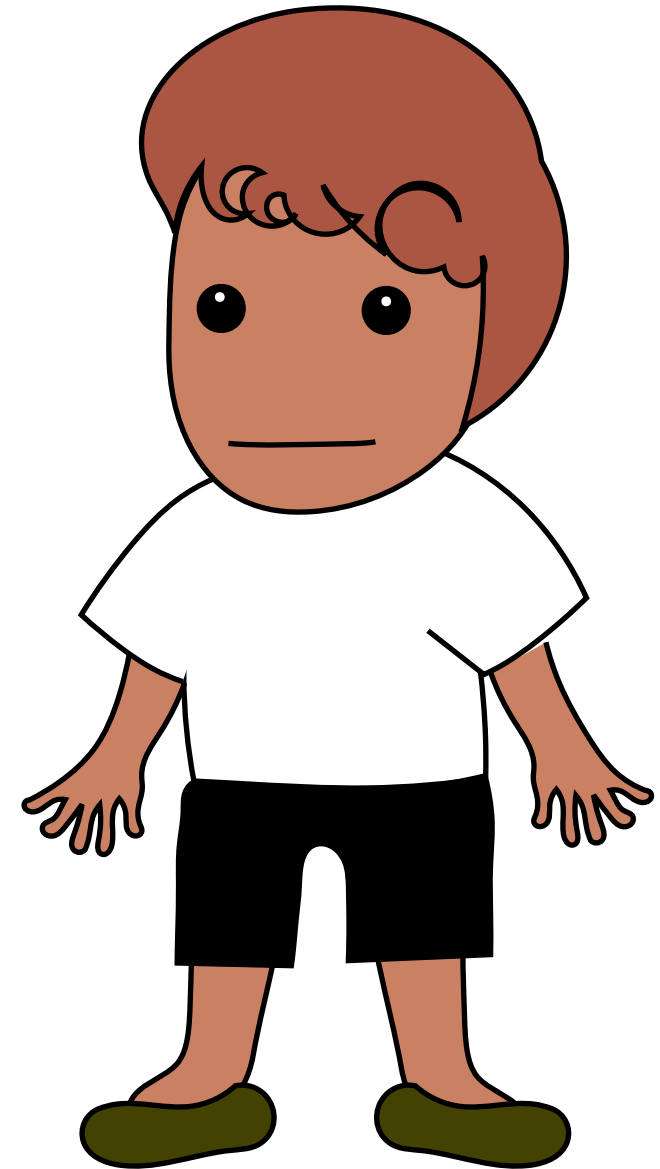

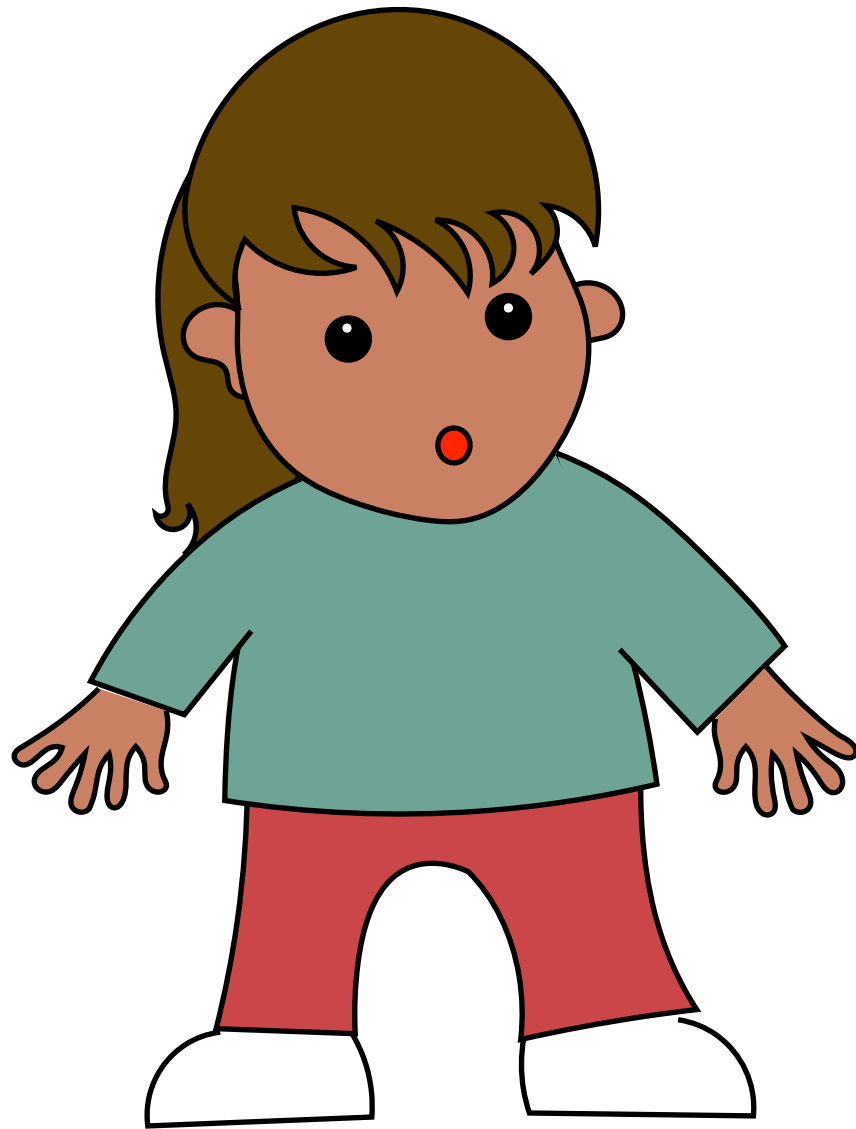

Stanley flipped the drawing over and looked at the drawing, and he did not like the drawing at all —
he thought the drawing was ugly!

So did Stanley like the drawing or did he not like the drawing?

Heather asked Stanley, “Stanley, how did you like my drawing?”
Stanley told Heather, “Heather, your drawing was pretty.”

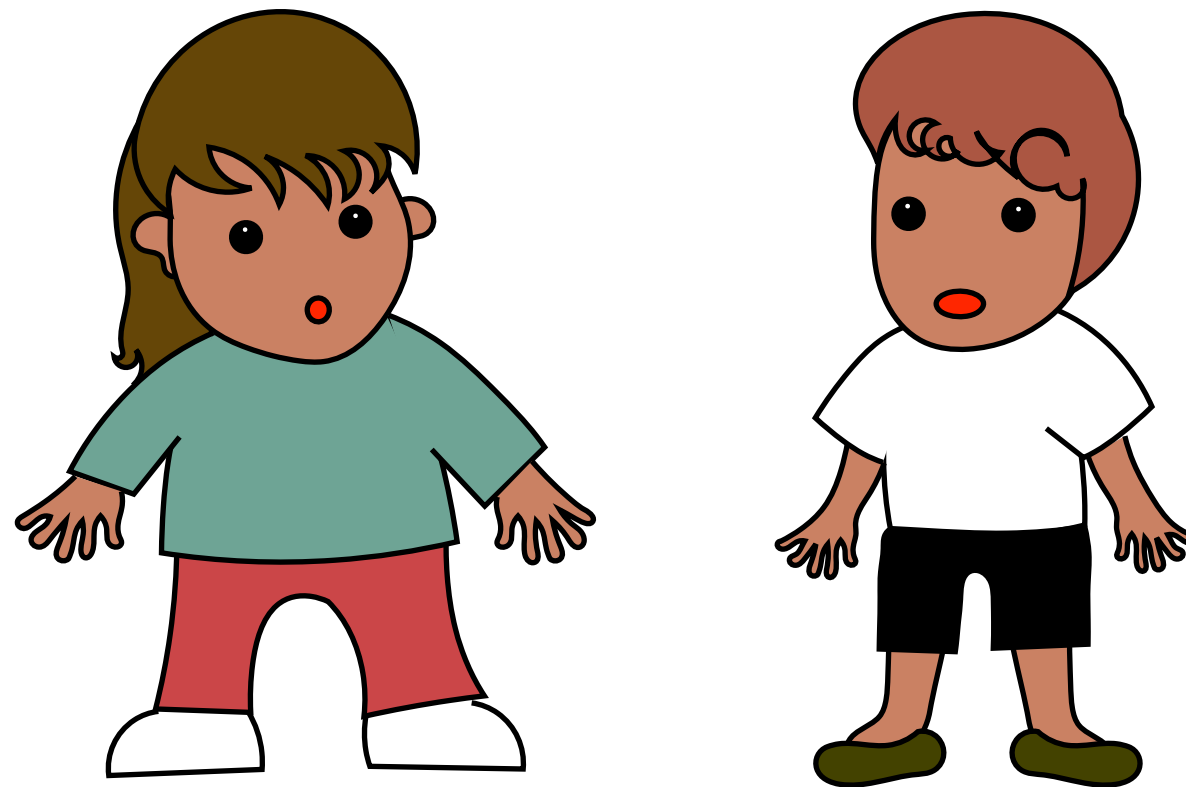

So what did Stanley tell Heather again?

Let's think about the story again.

Stanley thought Heather's drawing was ugly.

And Stanley told Heather that her drawing was pretty.

Why did Stanley say that to Heather? How did Heather feel?

Now, remember these faces? How nice is Stanley? Point to a face!

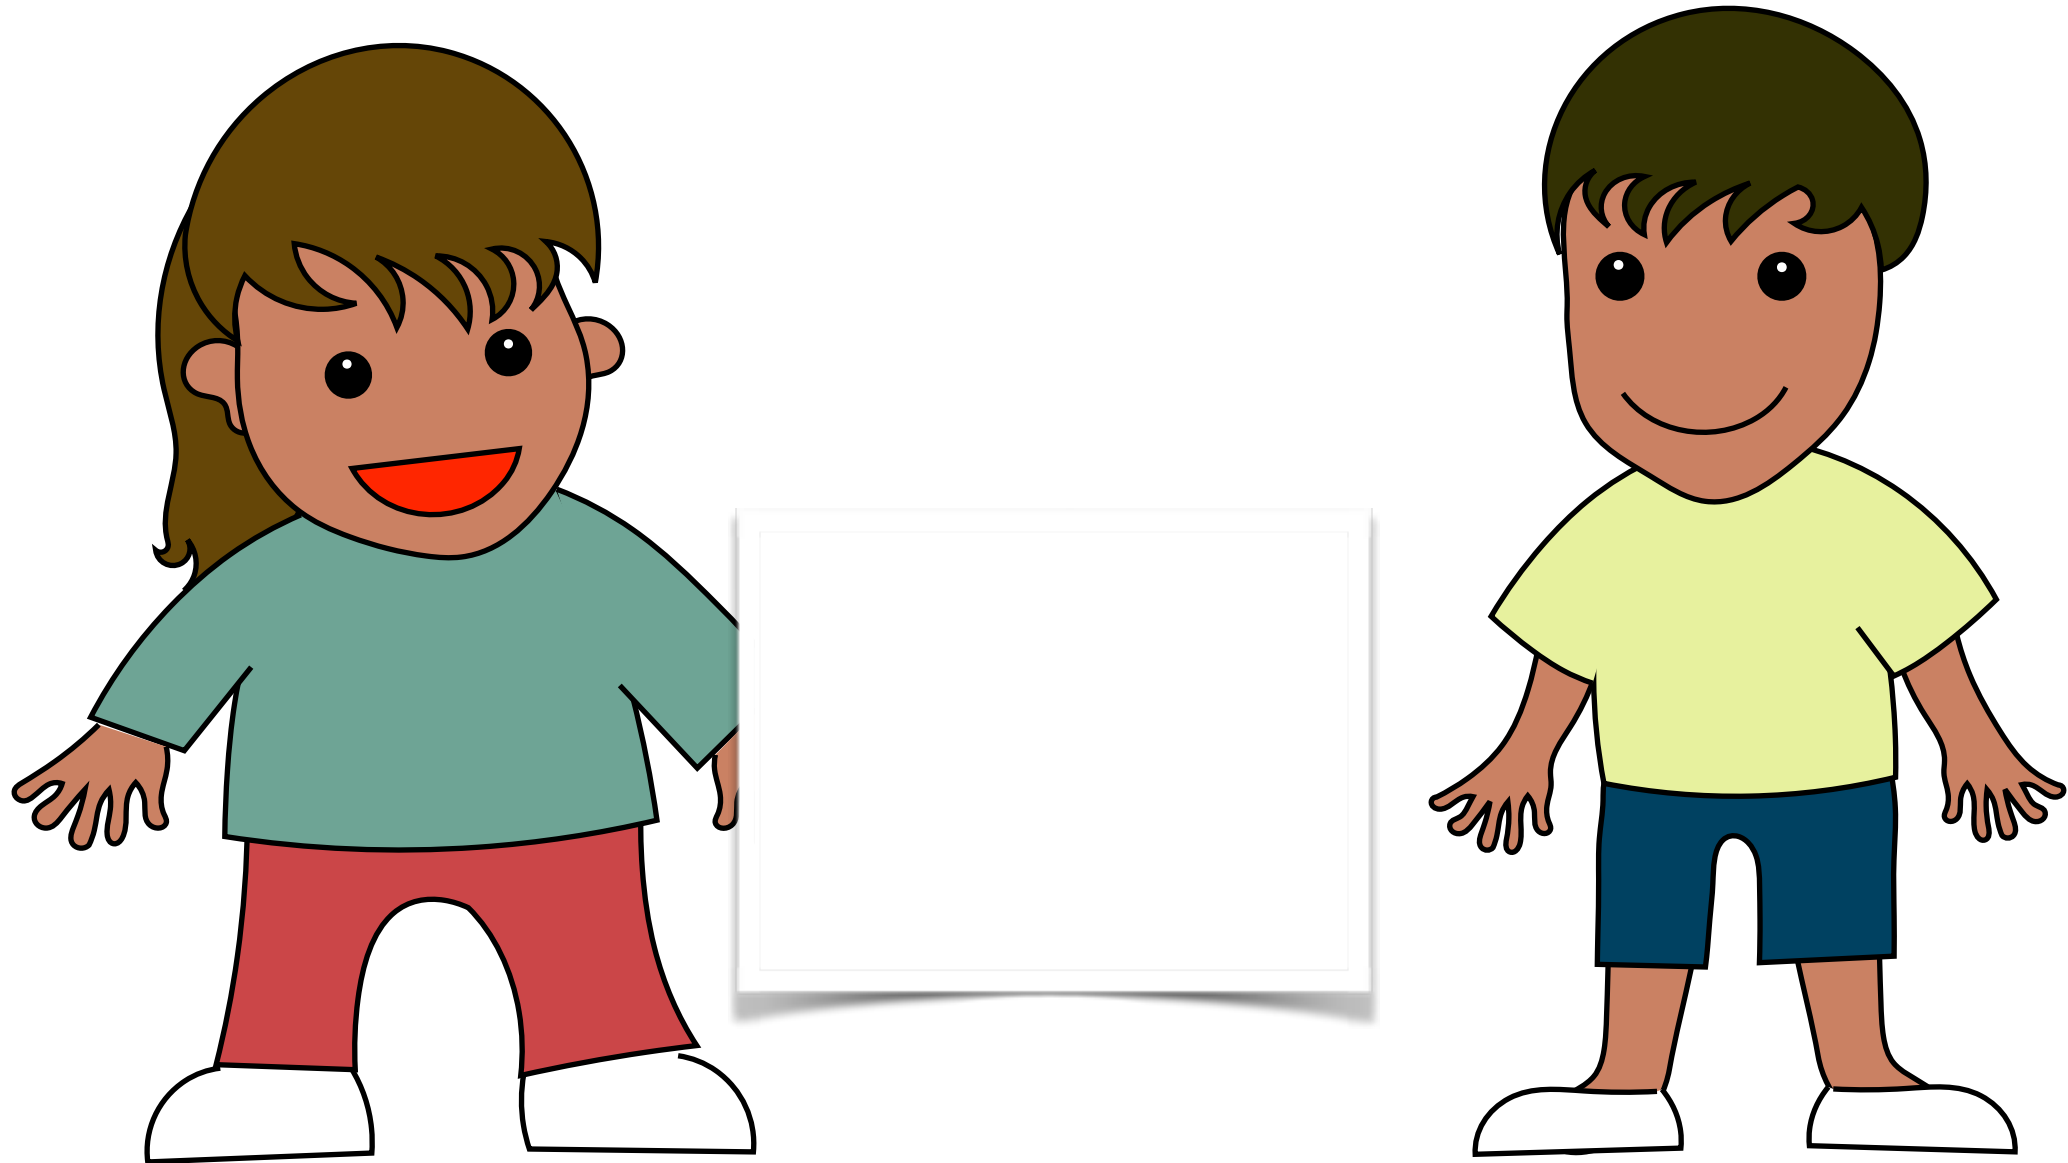

Look, this is Heather again!
One day, Heather decided to draw a picture of her friend.

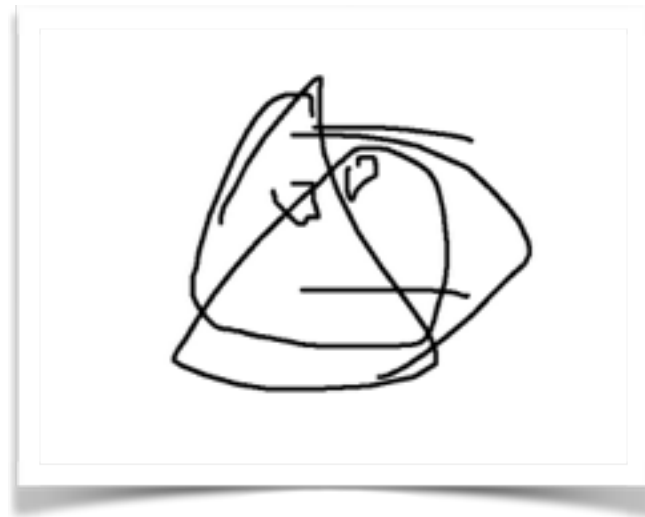

Heather brought her drawing to school and met her friend Richard.
Heather said to her friend Richard,
“Here, look at my drawing of you!”

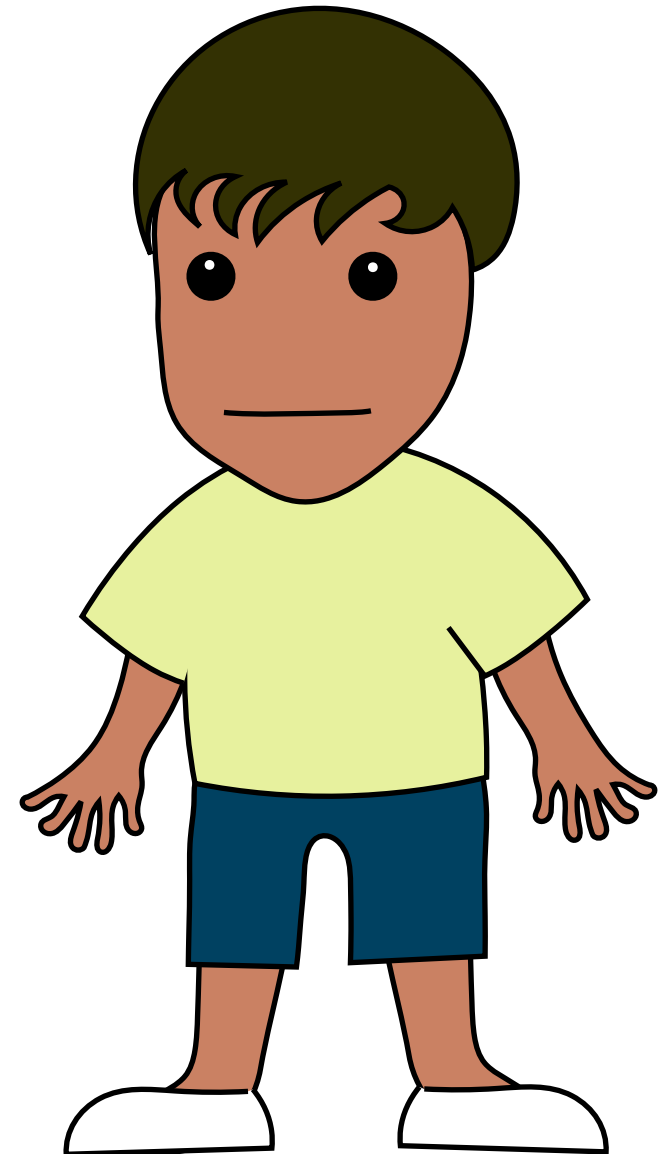

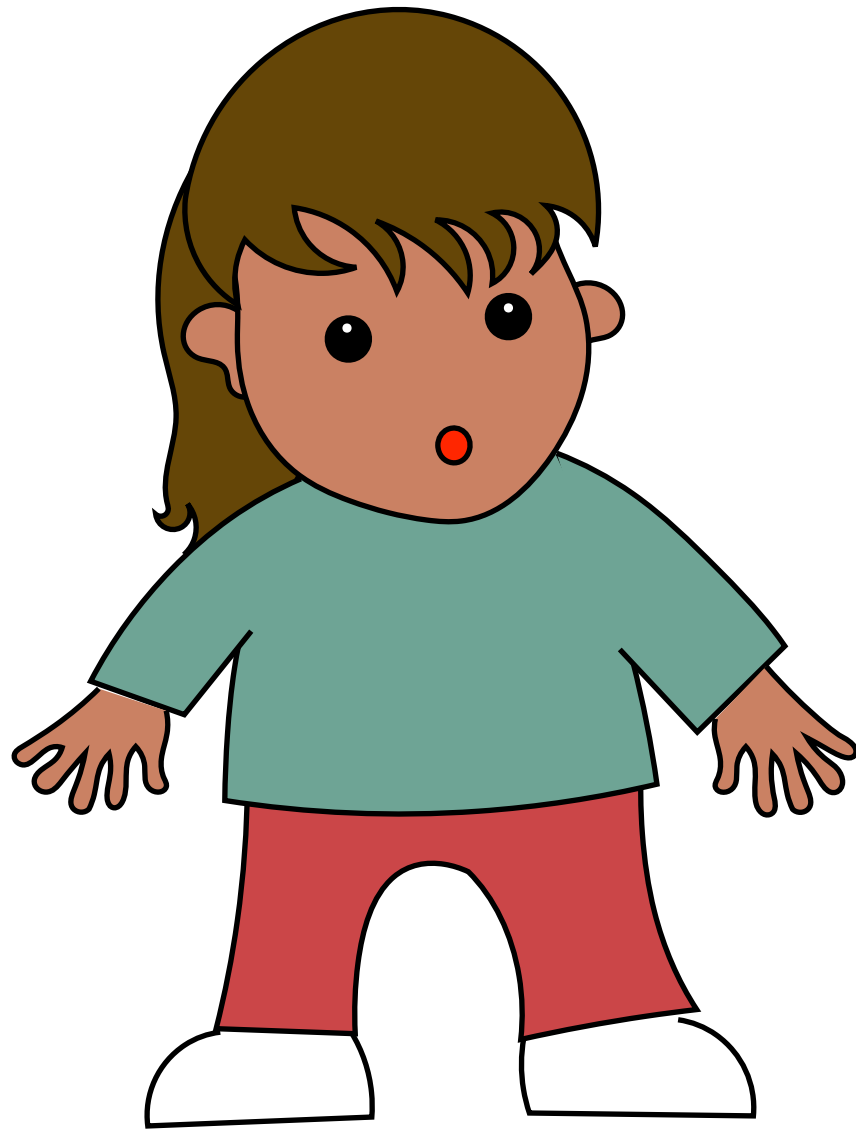

Richard flipped the drawing over and looked at the drawing,
and he did not like the drawing at all —
he thought the drawing was ugly!

So did Richard like the drawing or did he not like the drawing?

Heather asked Richard, “Richard, how did you like my drawing?”
Richard told Heather, “Heather, your drawing was ugly.”

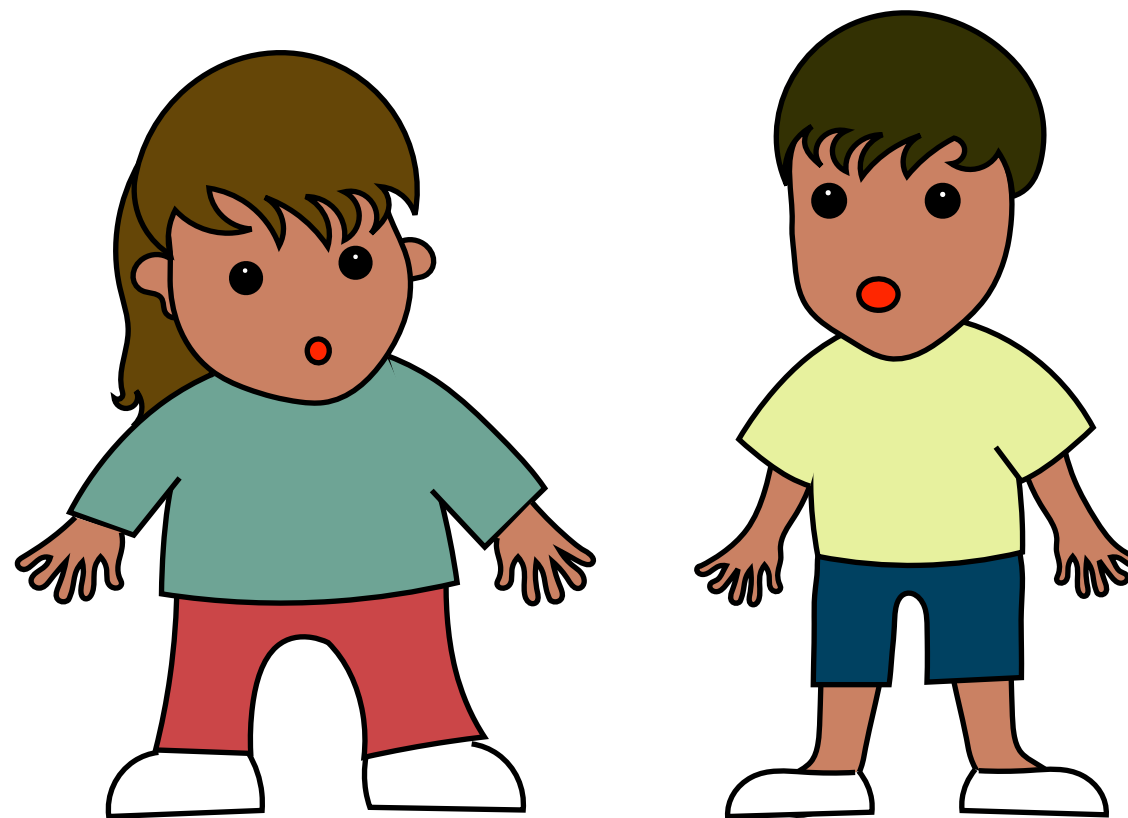

So what did Richard tell Heather again?

Let's think about the story again.

Richard thought Heather's drawing was ugly.

And Richard told Heather that her drawing was ugly.

Why did Richard say that to Heather? How did Heather feel?

Now, remember these faces? How nice is Richard? Point to a face!

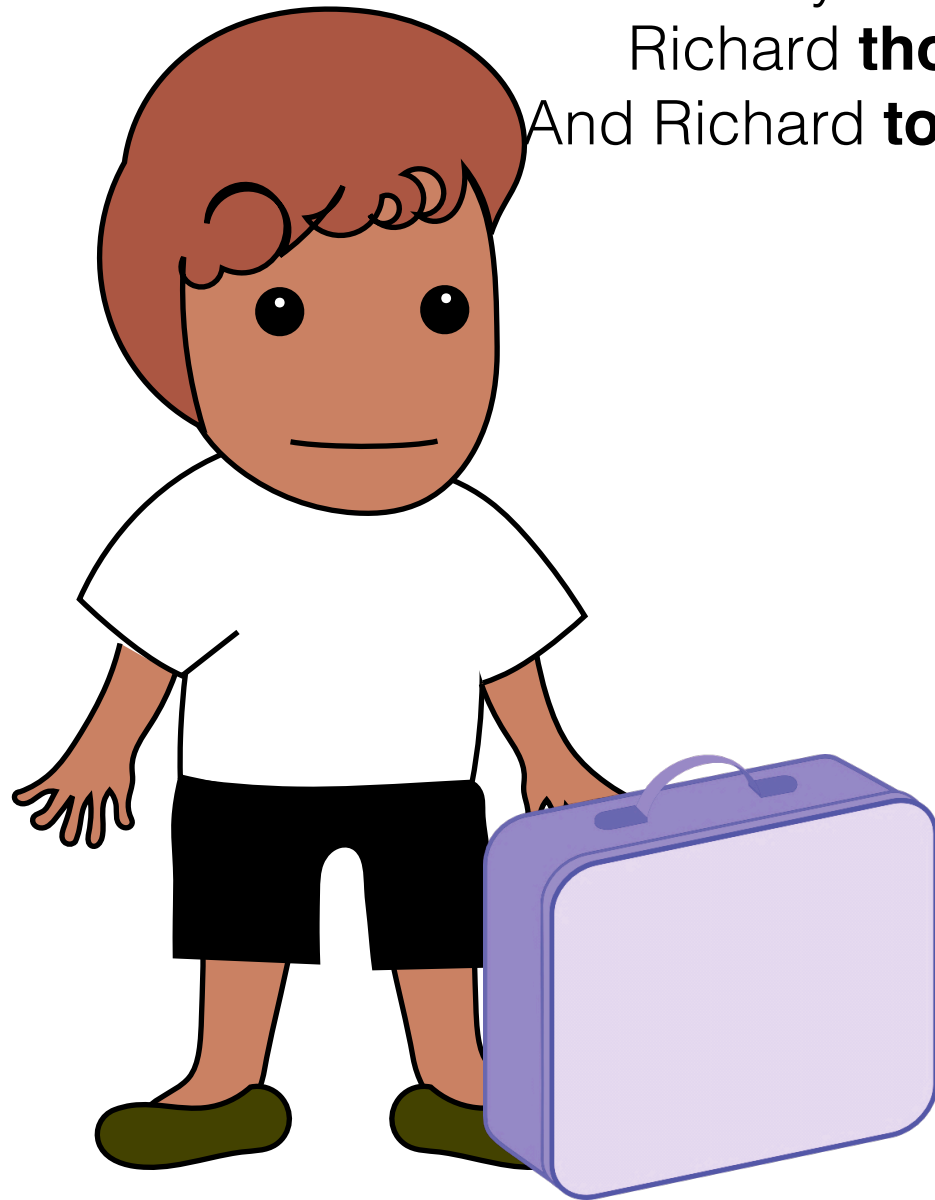

Remember Stanley and Richard from our story?
Look, here they are.

Remember, Stanley thought Heather drawing was ugly.

And Stanley told Heather that her drawing was pretty.

Richard thought Heather's drawing was ugly.

And Richard told Heather that her drawing was ugly.

A teacher gave them boxes with drawings inside.

The drawing can be really pretty, or really ugly.

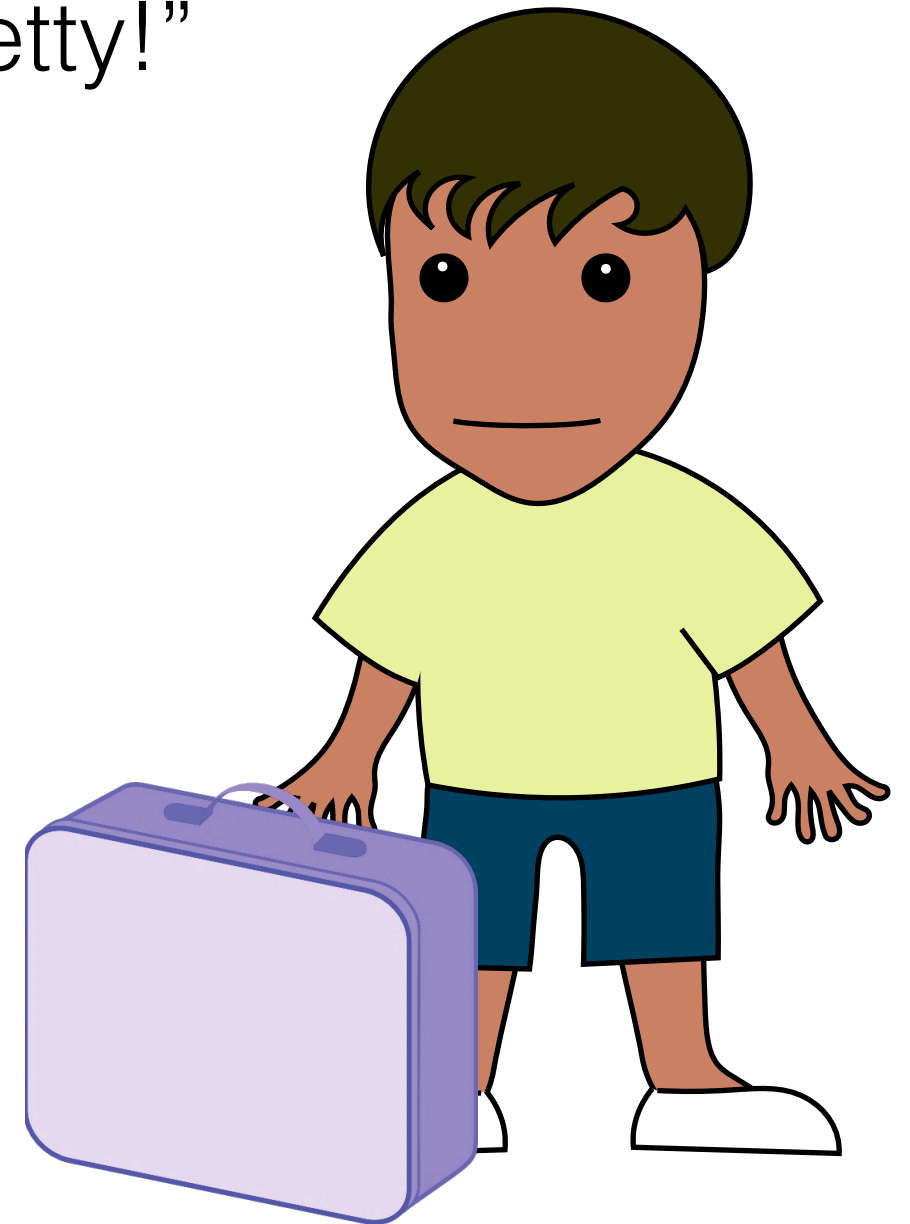

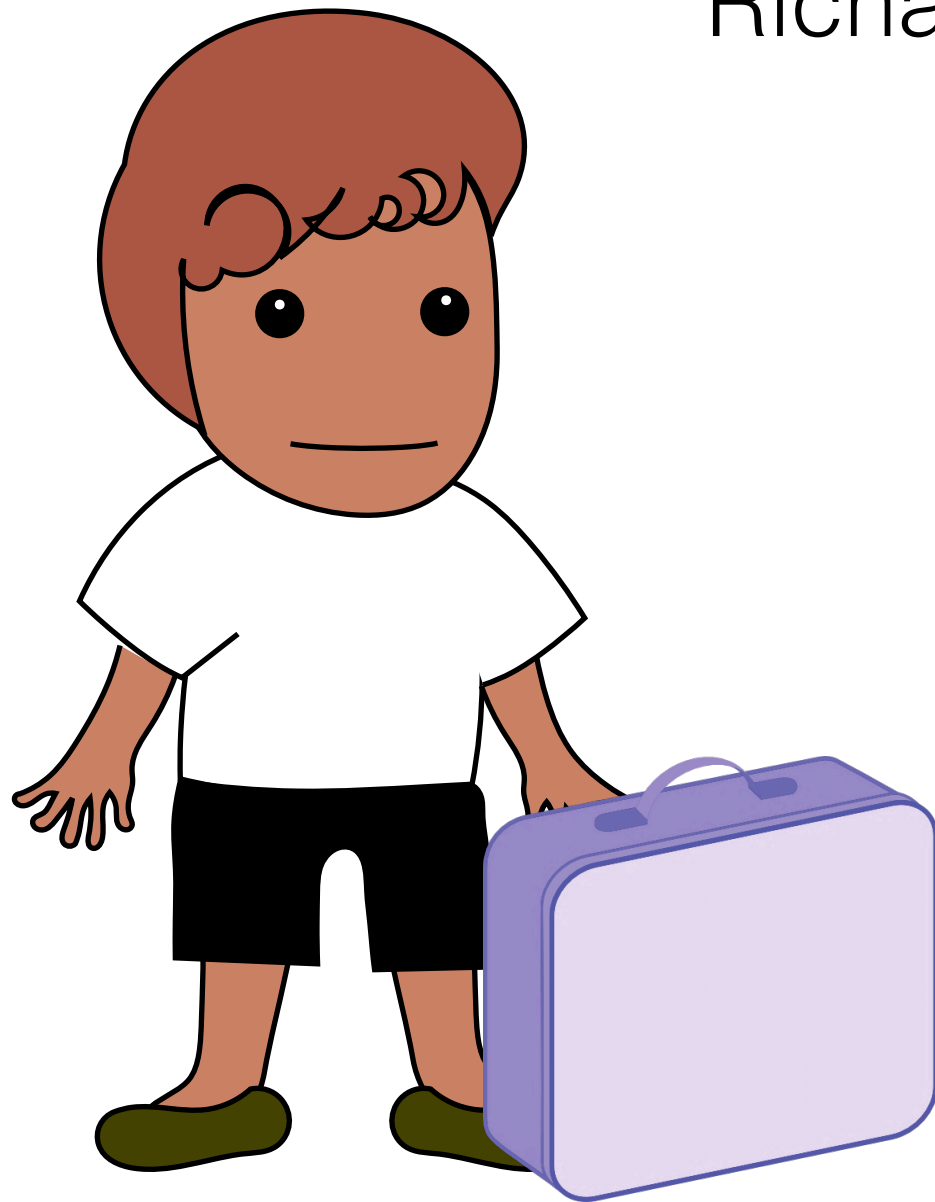

But Stanley and Richard won't know until they open their boxes!

Stanley opened his box and looked at the drawing.

Stanley says: "It's pretty!"

Richard also opened his box and looked at the drawing.

Richard says: "It's pretty!"

Whose drawing do you think is prettier? Stanley's or Richard's?

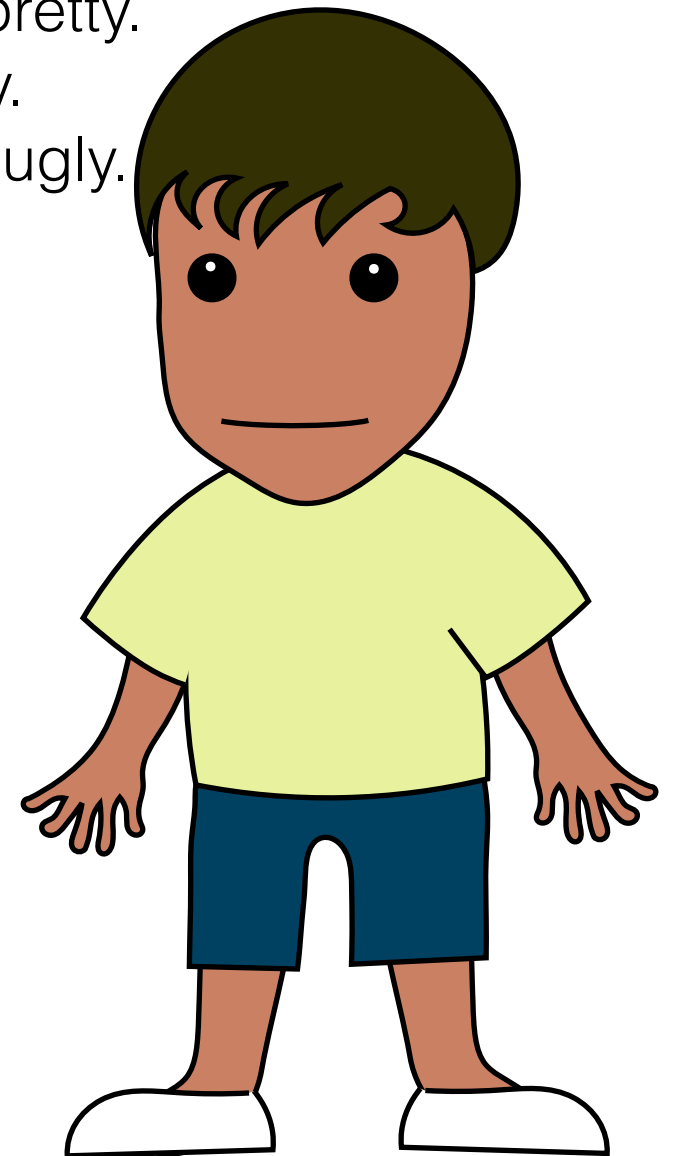

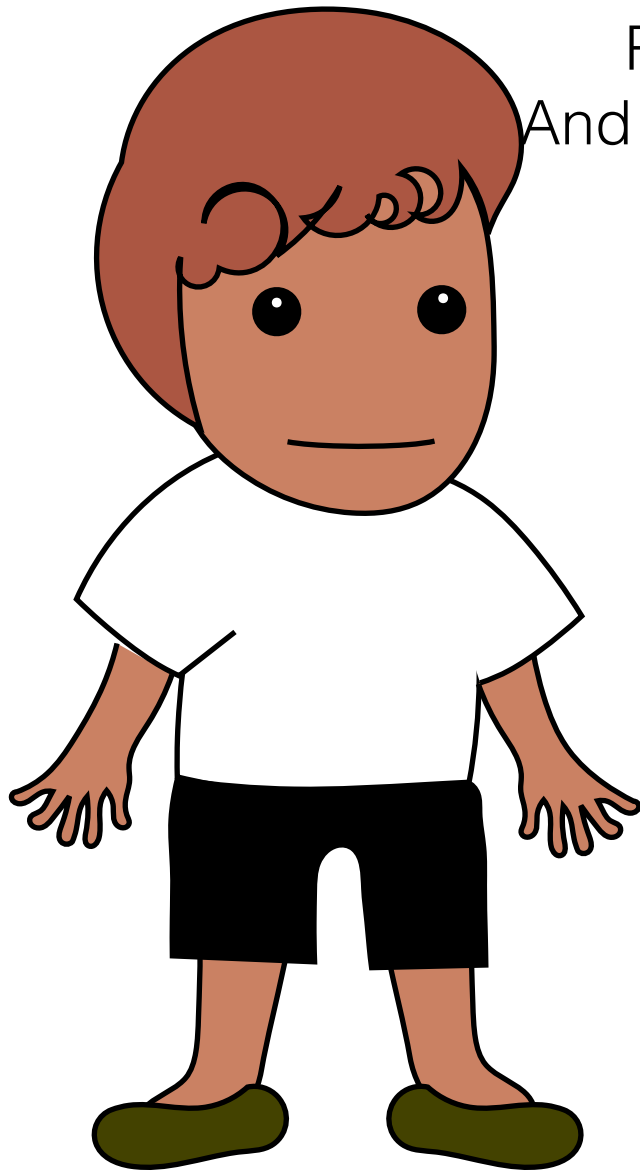

Afterwards, Stanley and Richard went outside to play.

Remember, Stanley thought Heather drawing was ugly.

And Stanley told Heather that her drawing was pretty.

Richard thought Heather's drawing was ugly.

And Richard told Heather that her drawing was ugly.

Who do you want to play with more, Stanley or Richard? Why?

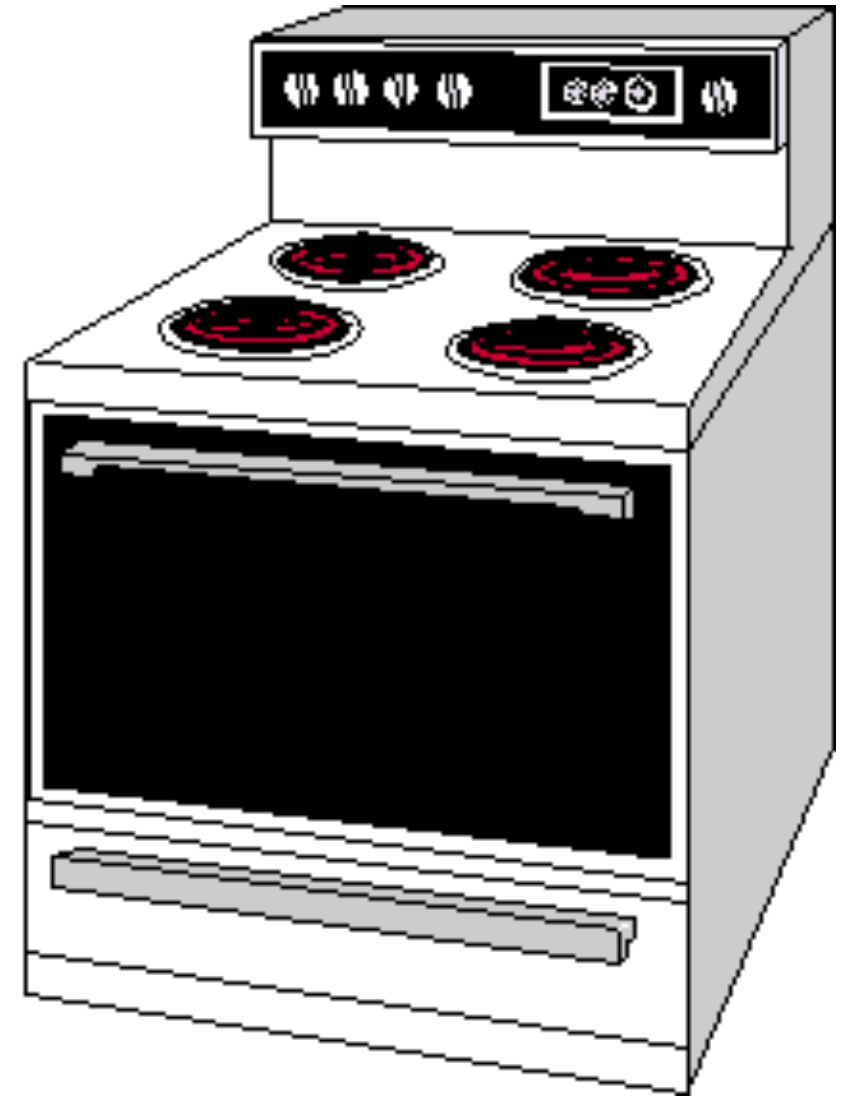

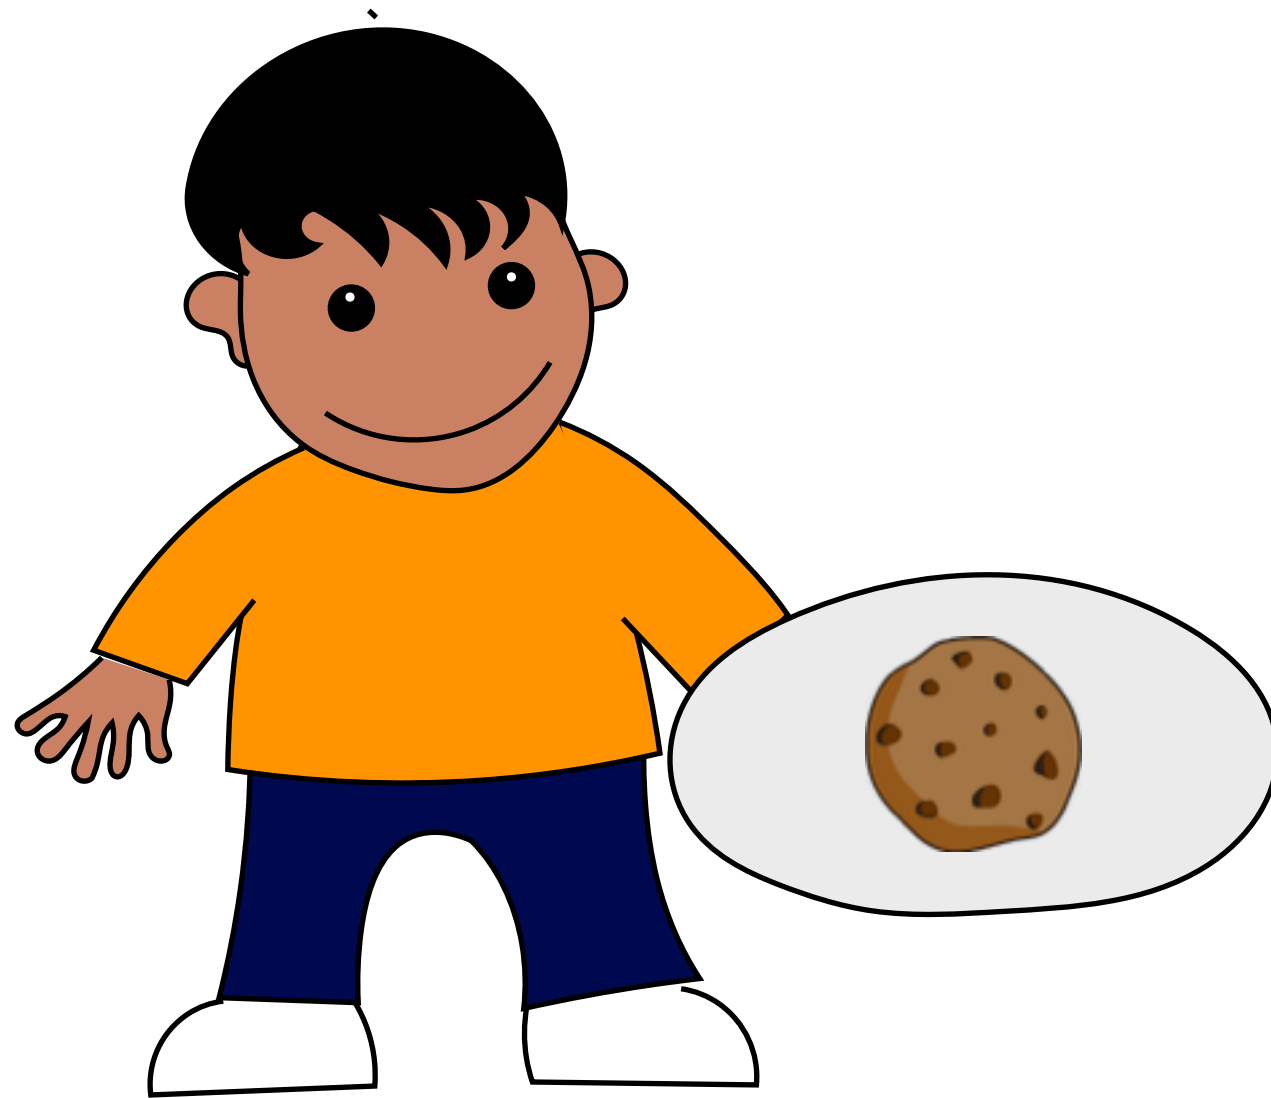

That's the end of the story about Heather, Stanley and Richard!
That was fun!

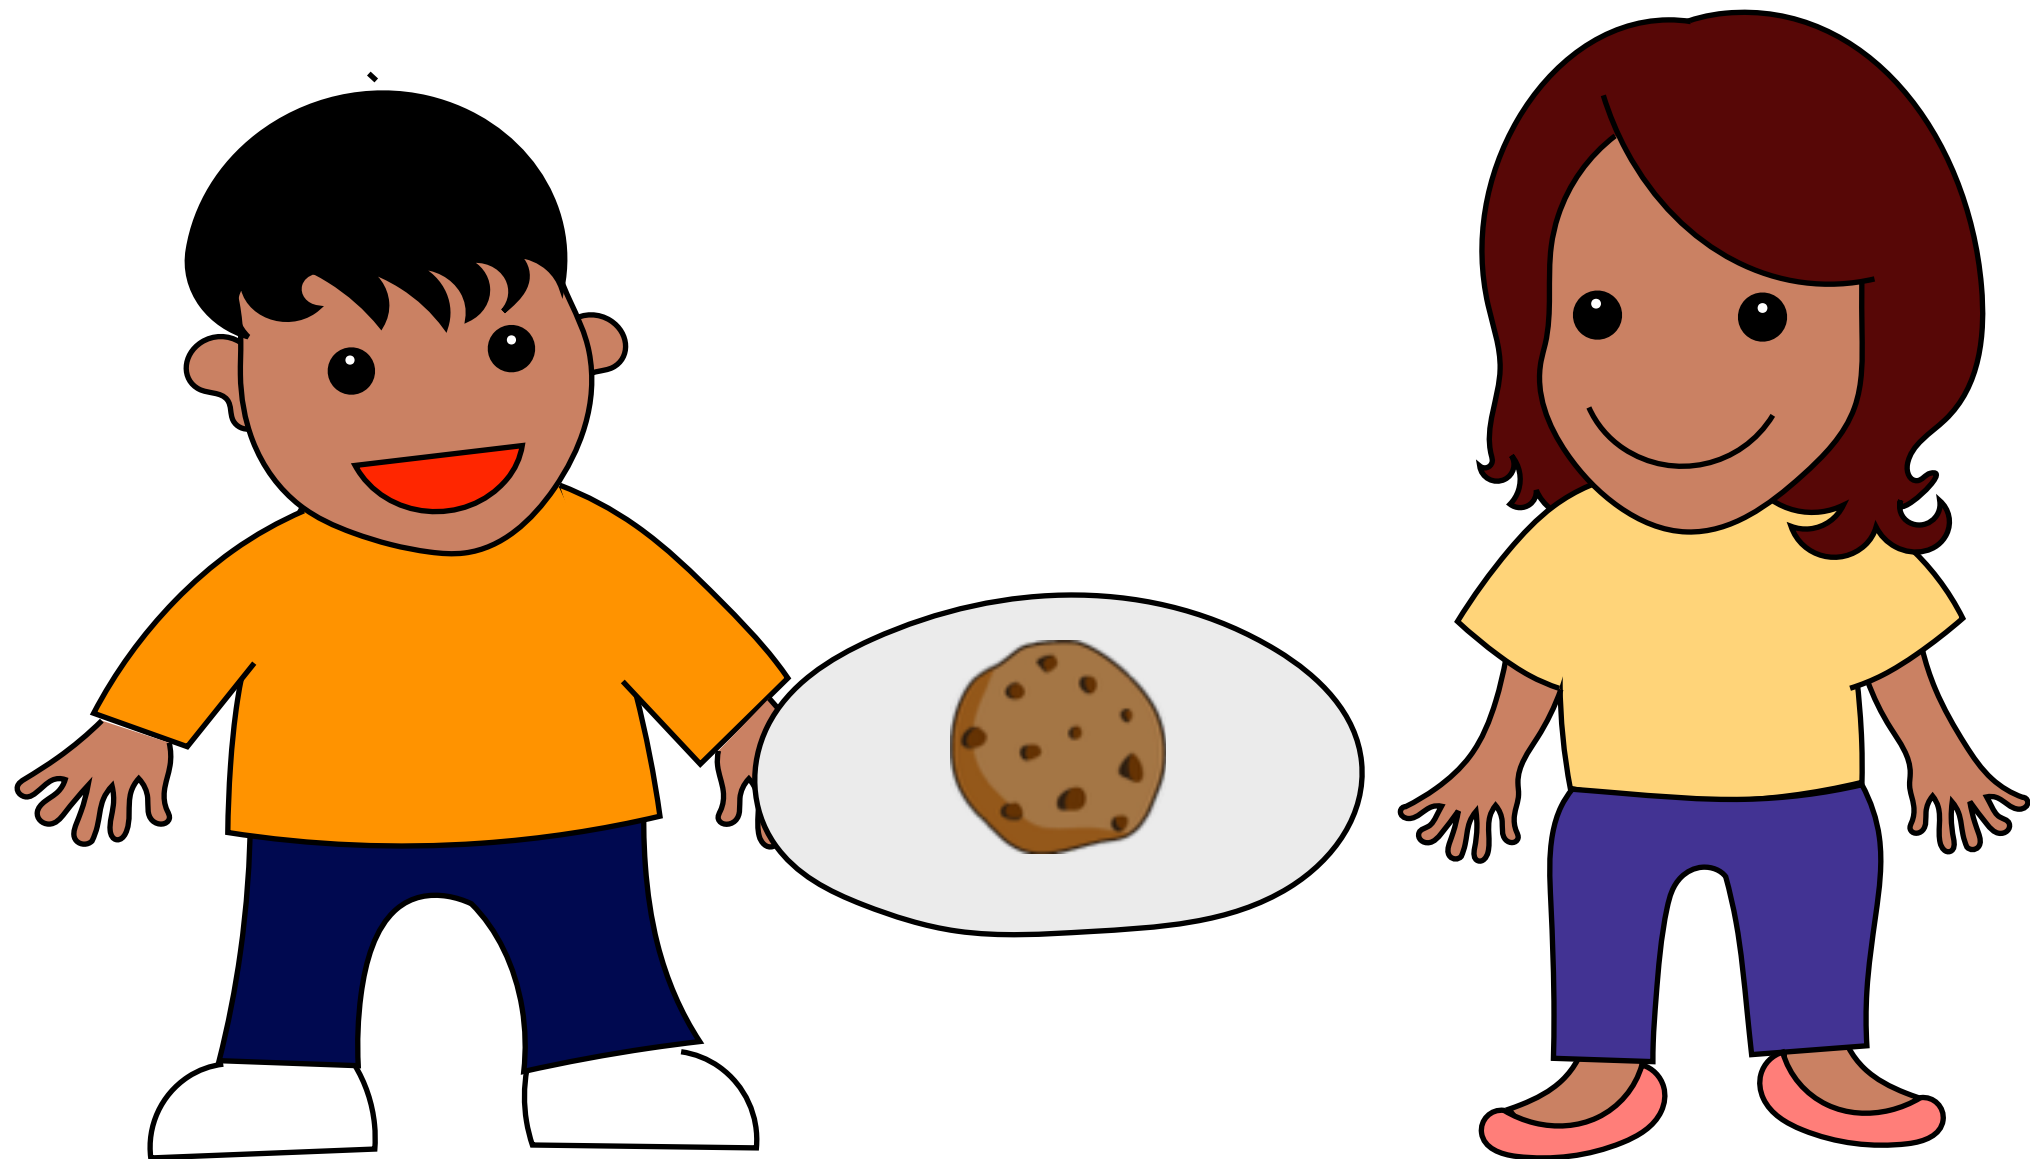

Are you ready to listen to my next story?

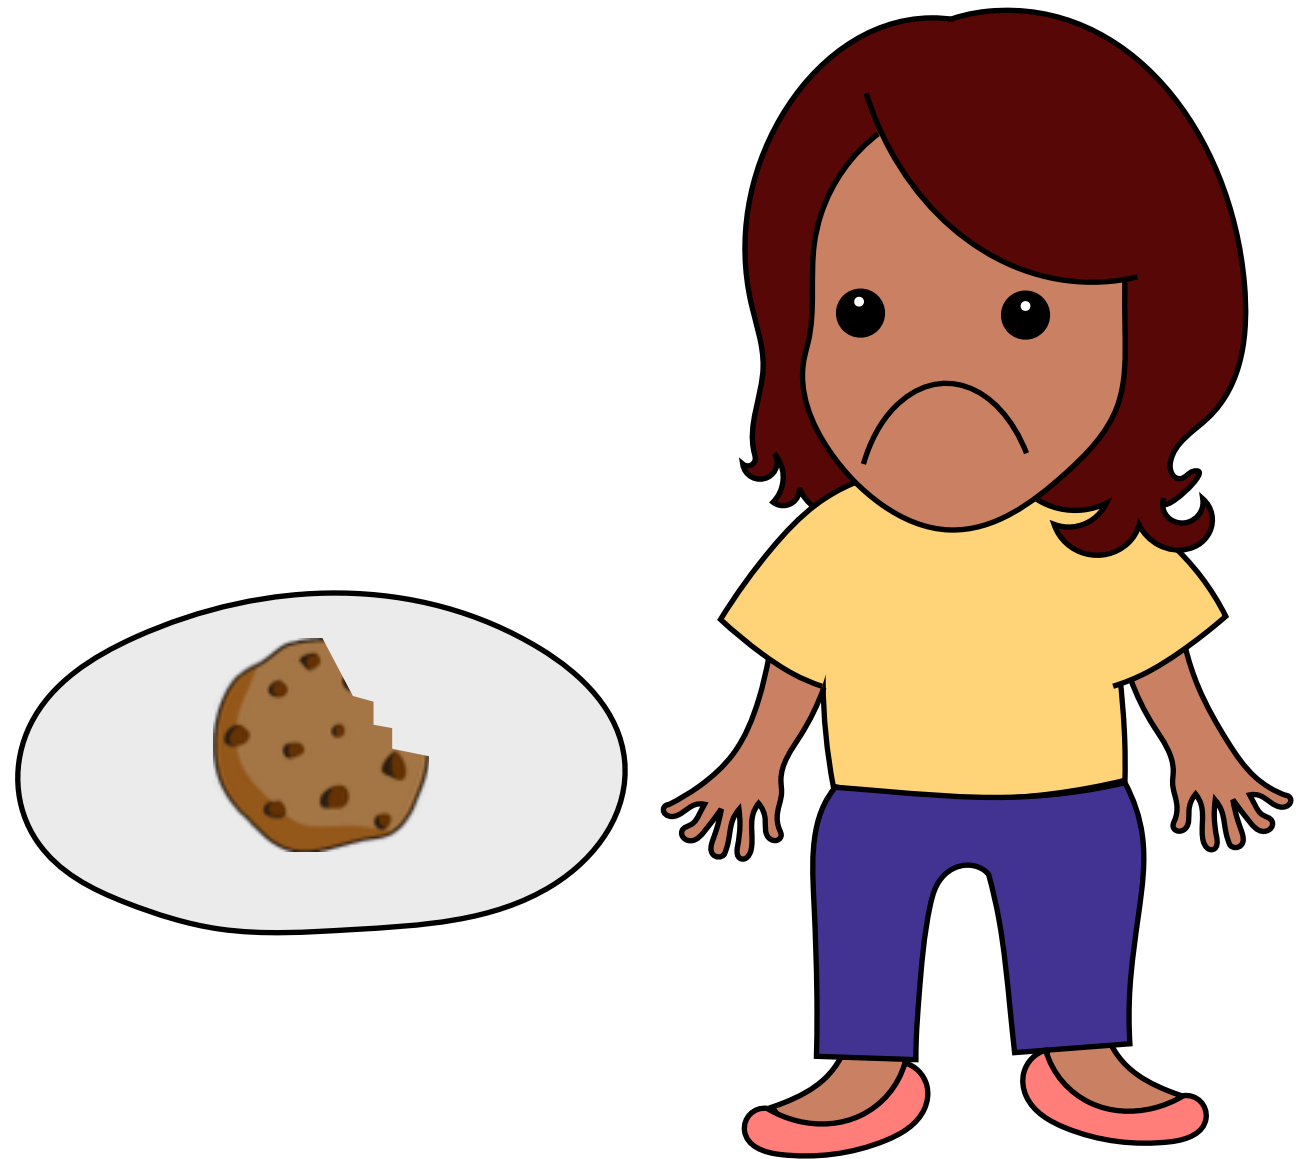

Look, this is Edward!
One day, Edward decided to bake some cookies.

Edward brought his cookie to school and met his friend Sally.
Edward said to his friend Sally, “Here, try my cookie!”

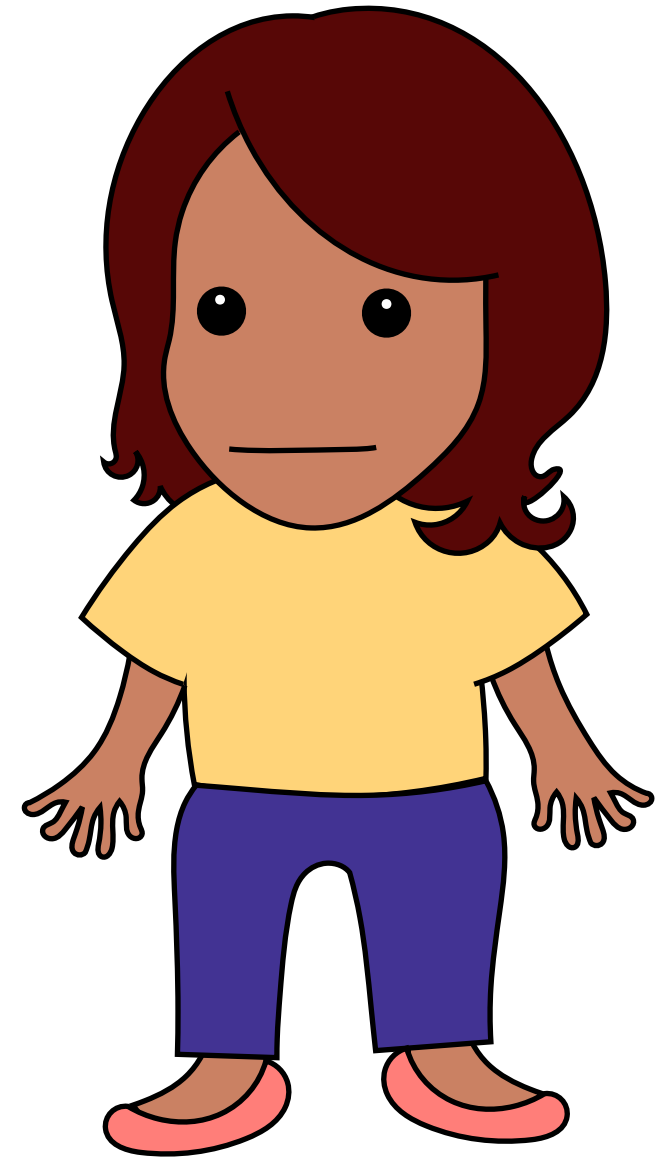

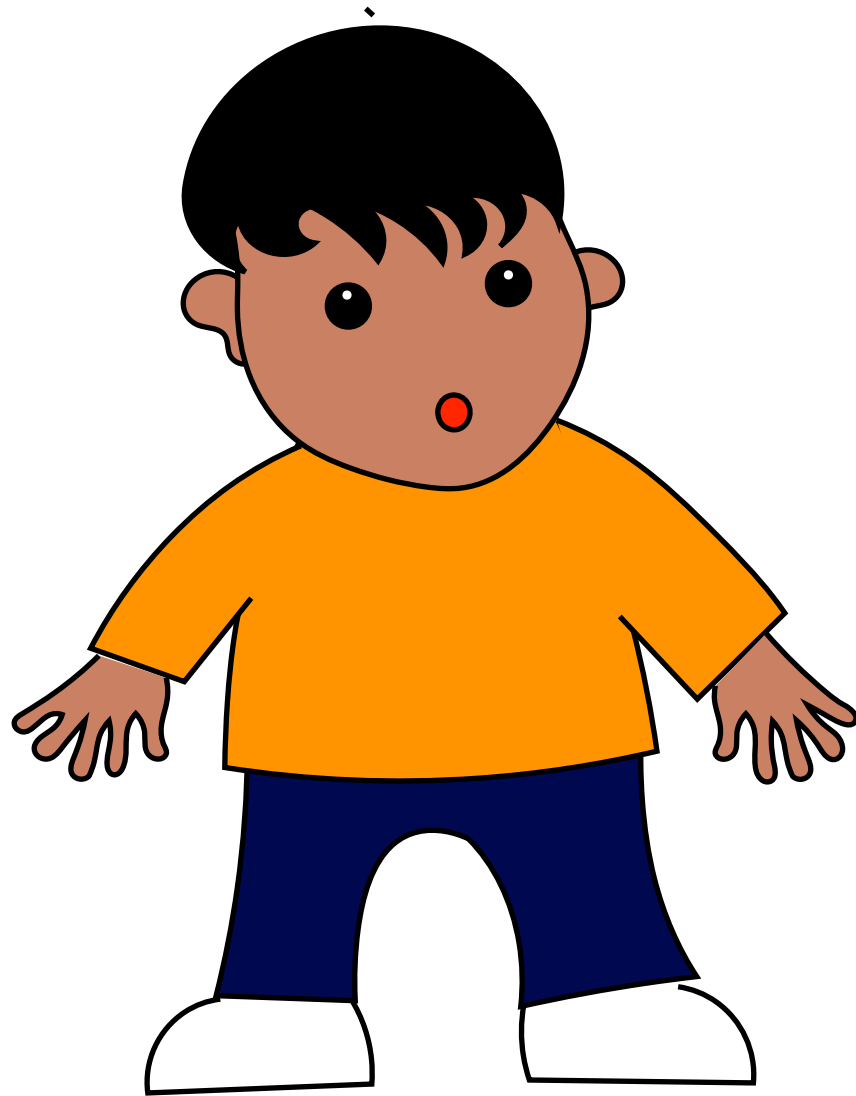

Sally tasted the cookie,
and she did not like the cookie at all —
she thought the cookie tasted yucky!

So did Sally like the cookie or did she not like the cookie?

Edward asked Sally, “Sally, how did you like my cookie?”
Sally told Edward, “Edward, your cookie was yucky.”

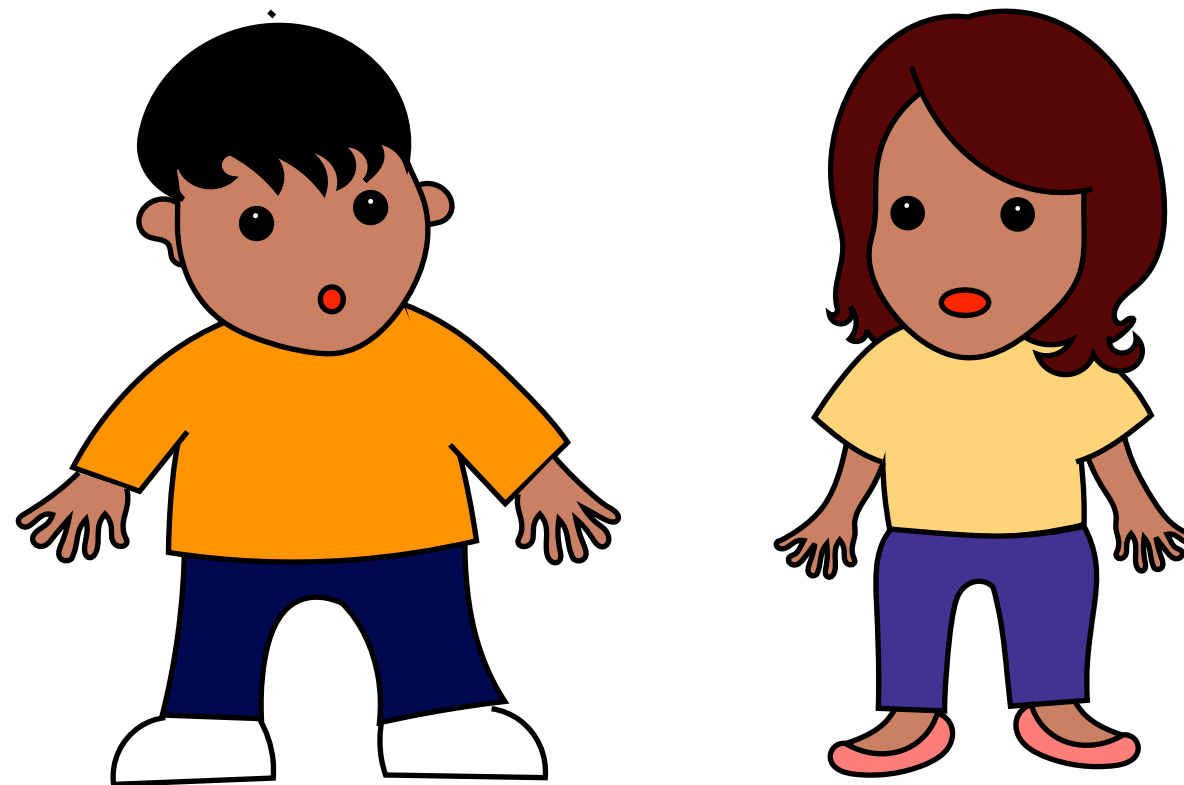

So what did Sally tell Edward again?

Let's think about the story again.

Sally thought Edward's cookie was yucky.

And Sally told Edward that his cookie was yucky.

Why did Sally say that to Edward? How did Edward feel?

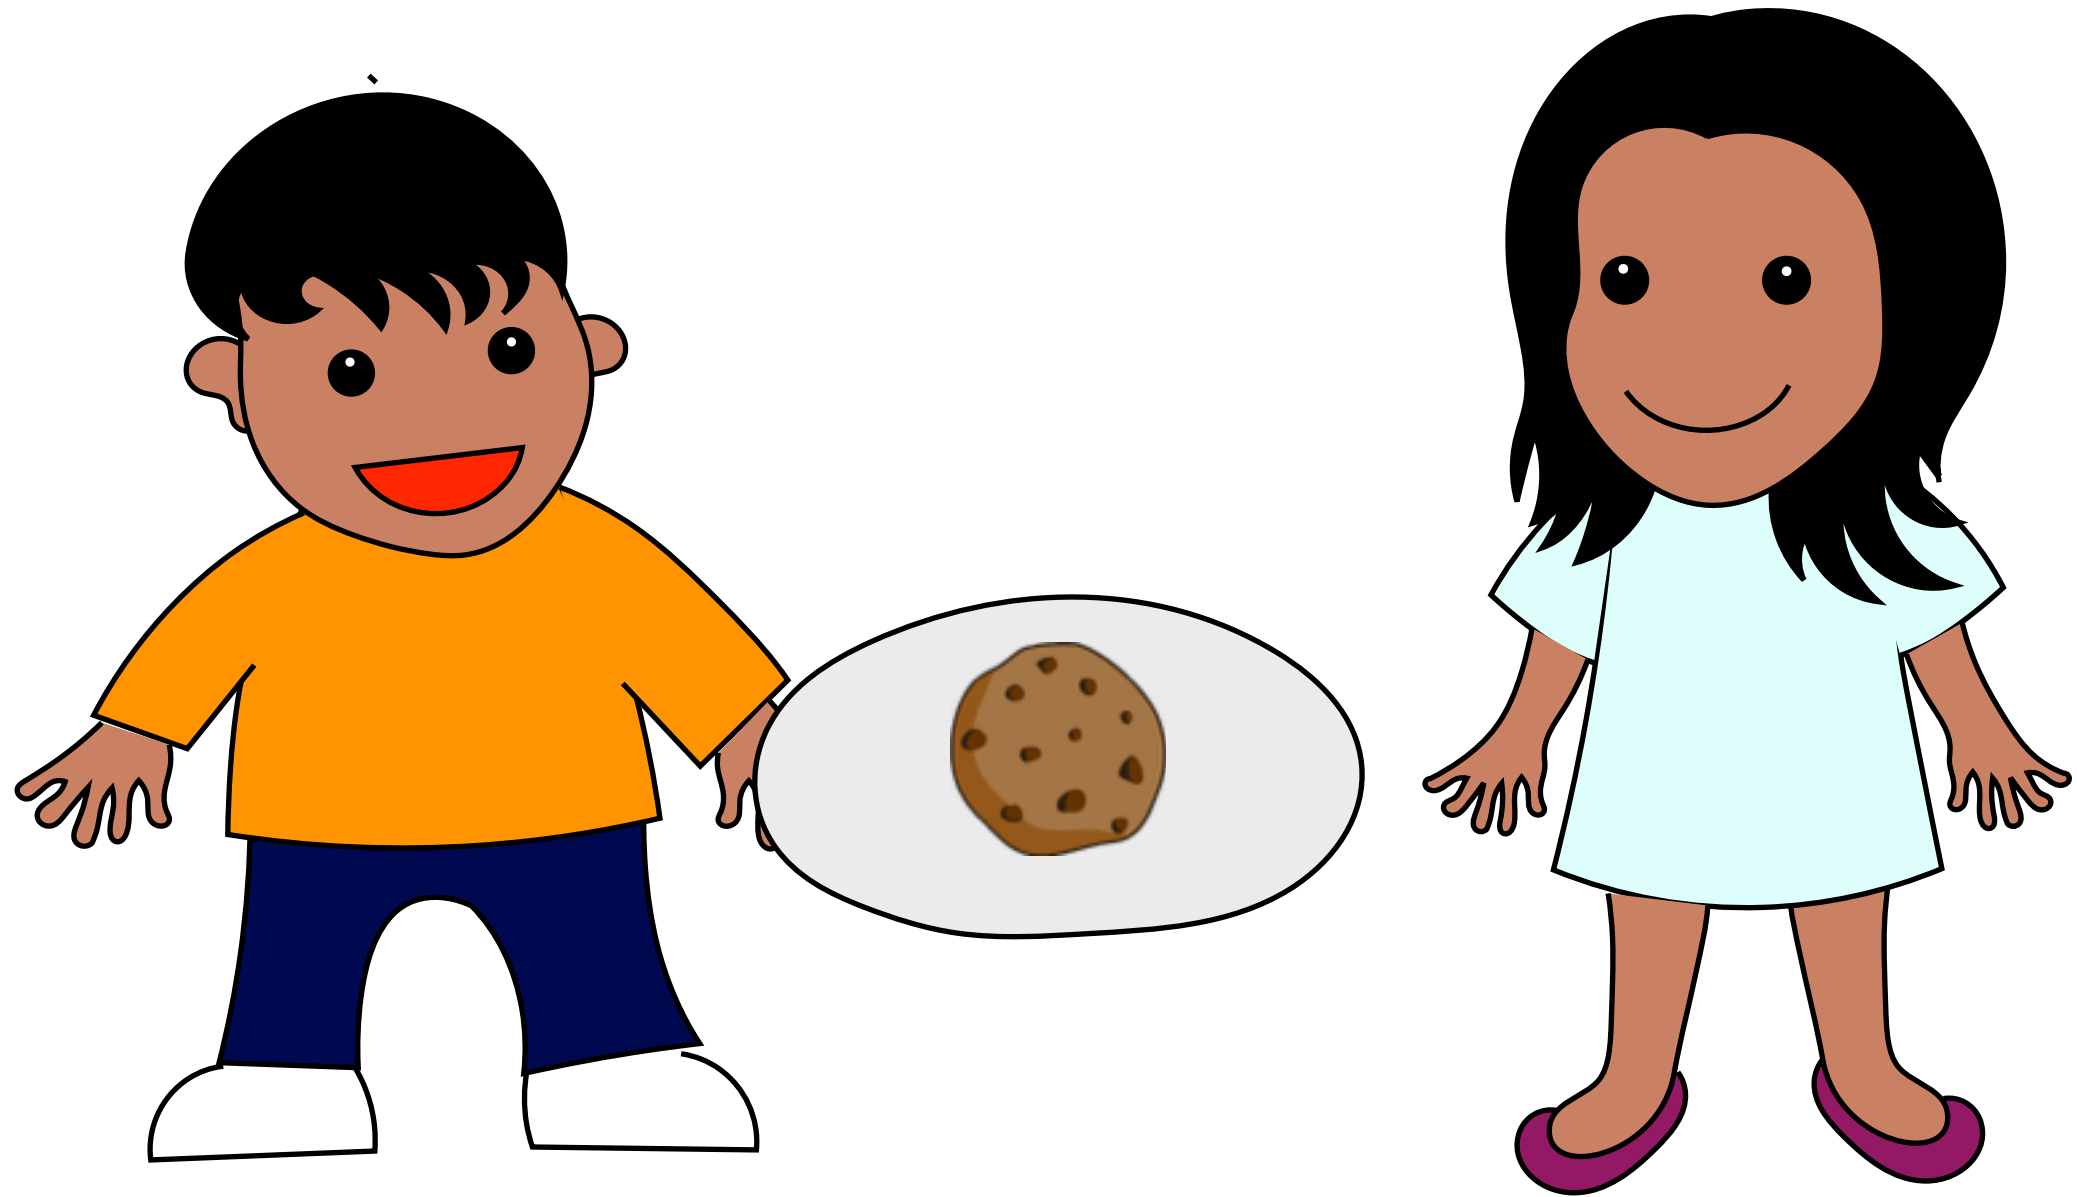

Now, remember these faces? How nice is Sally? Point to a face!

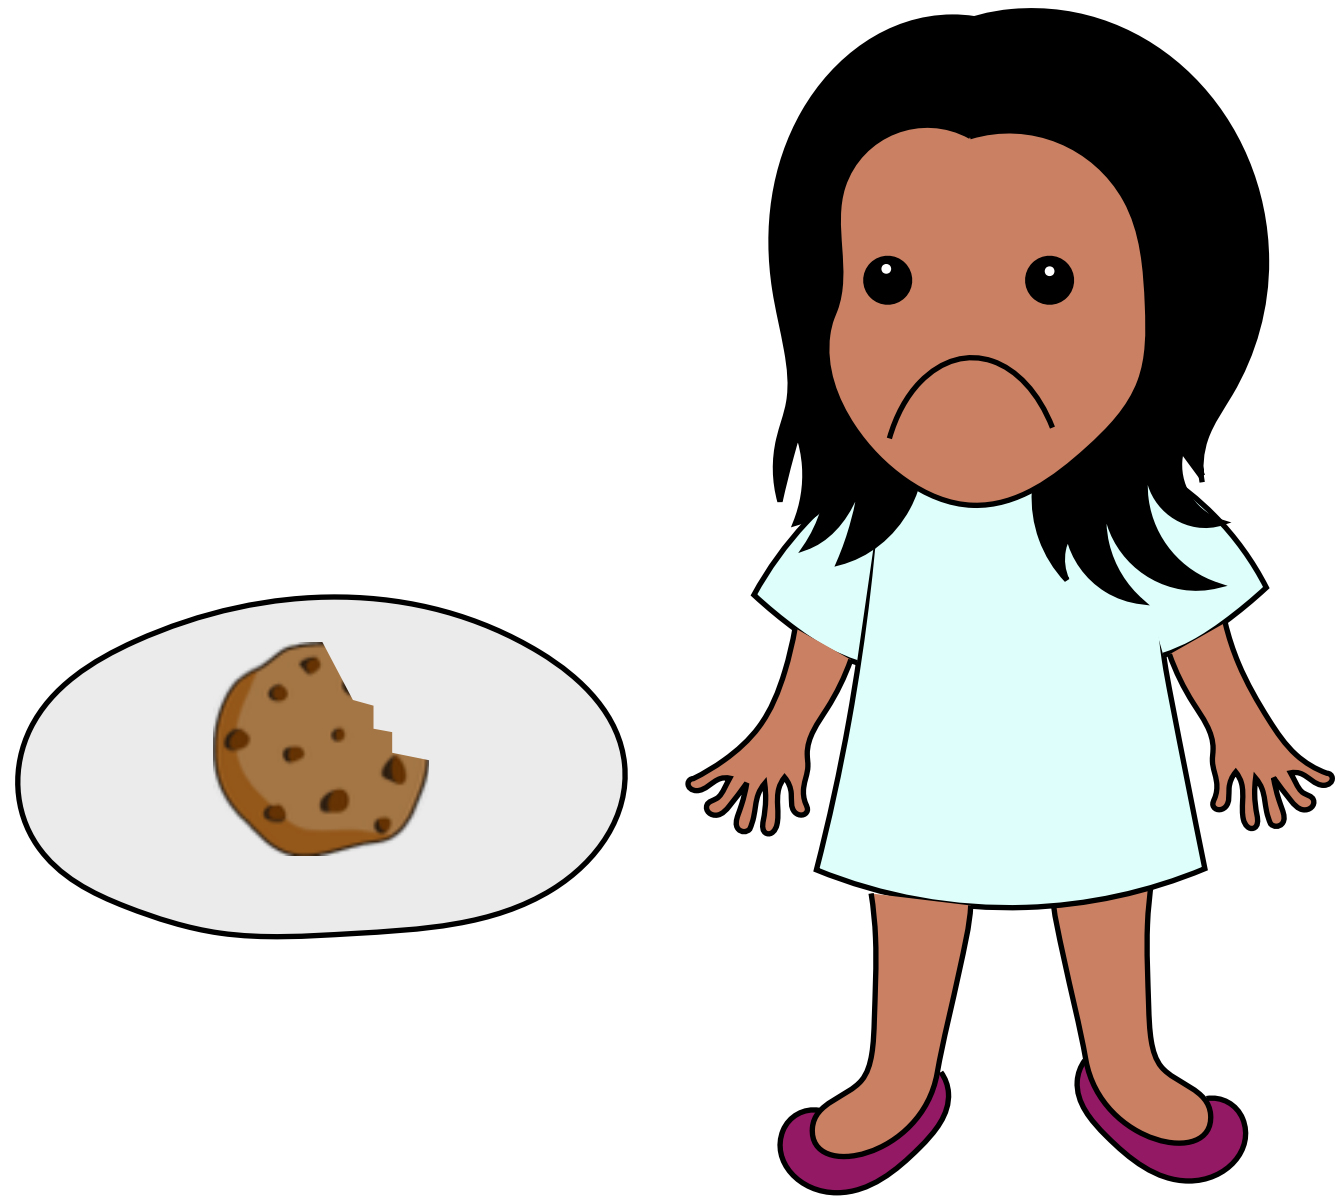

Look, this is Edward again!
One day, Edward decided to bake some cookies.

Edward brought his cookie to school and met his friend Mary.
Edward said to his friend Mary, “Here, try my cookie!”

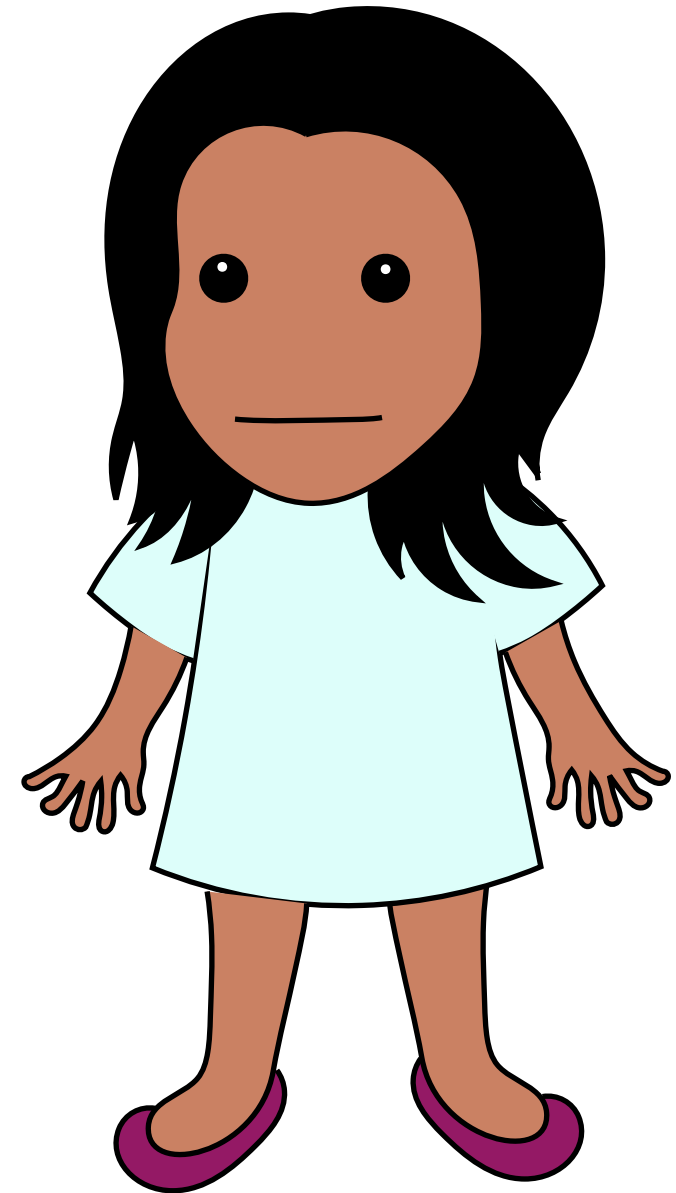

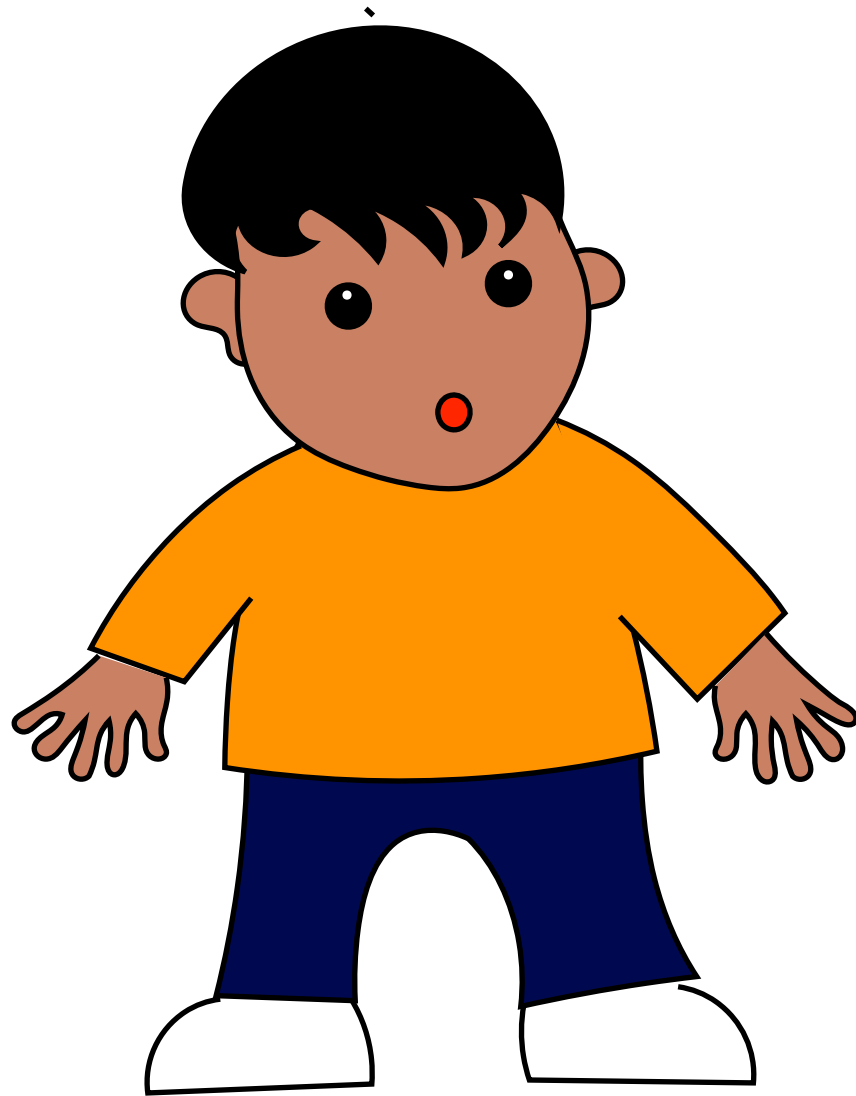

Mary tasted the cookie,
and she did not like the cookie at all —
she thought the cookie tasted yucky!

So did Mary like the cookie or did she not like the cookie?

Edward asked Mary, “Mary, how did you like my cookie?”
Mary told Edward, “Edward, your cookie was tasty.”

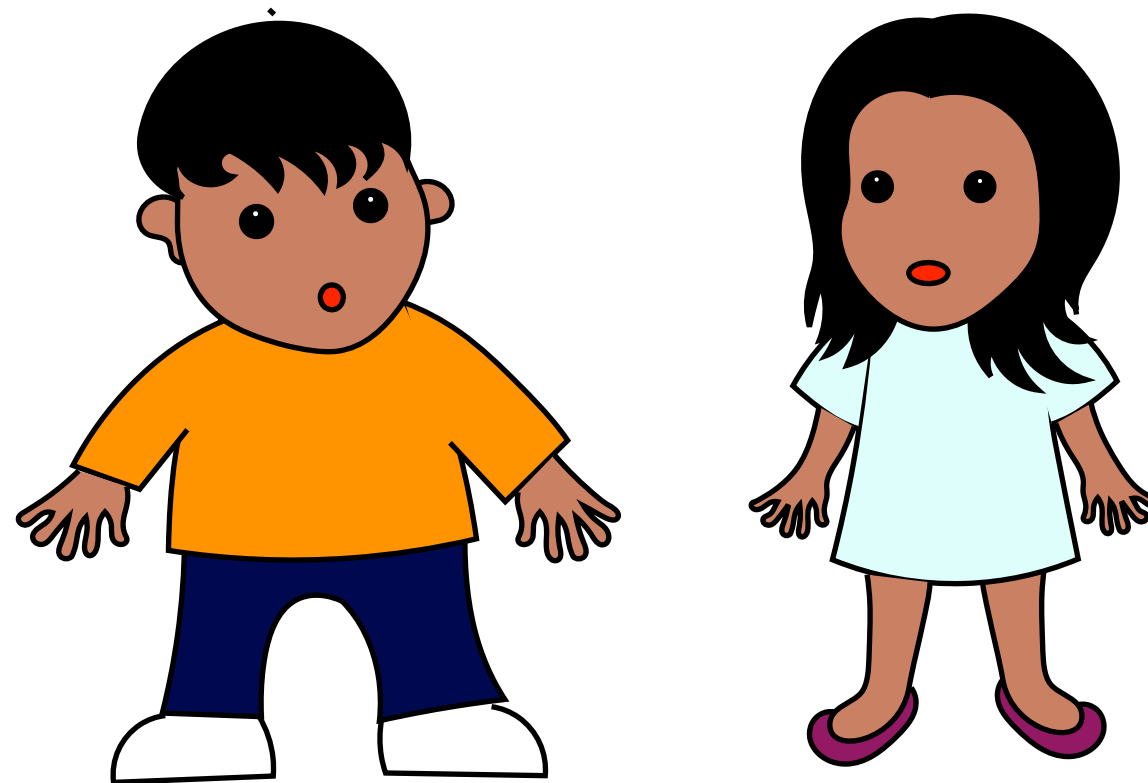

So what did Mary tell Edward again?

Let's think about the story again.

Mary thought Edward's cookie was yucky.

And Mary told Edward that his cookie was tasty.

Why did Mary say that to Edward? How did Edward feel?

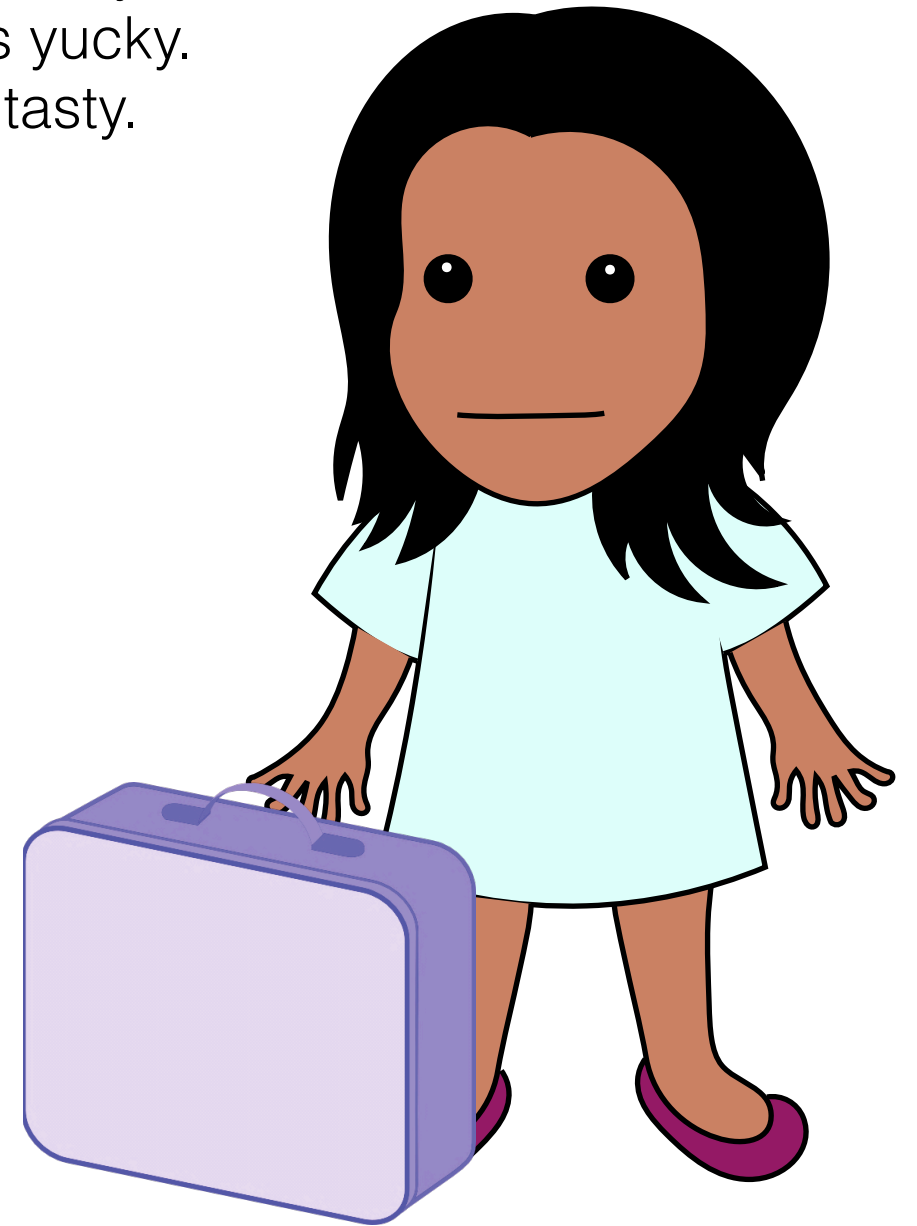

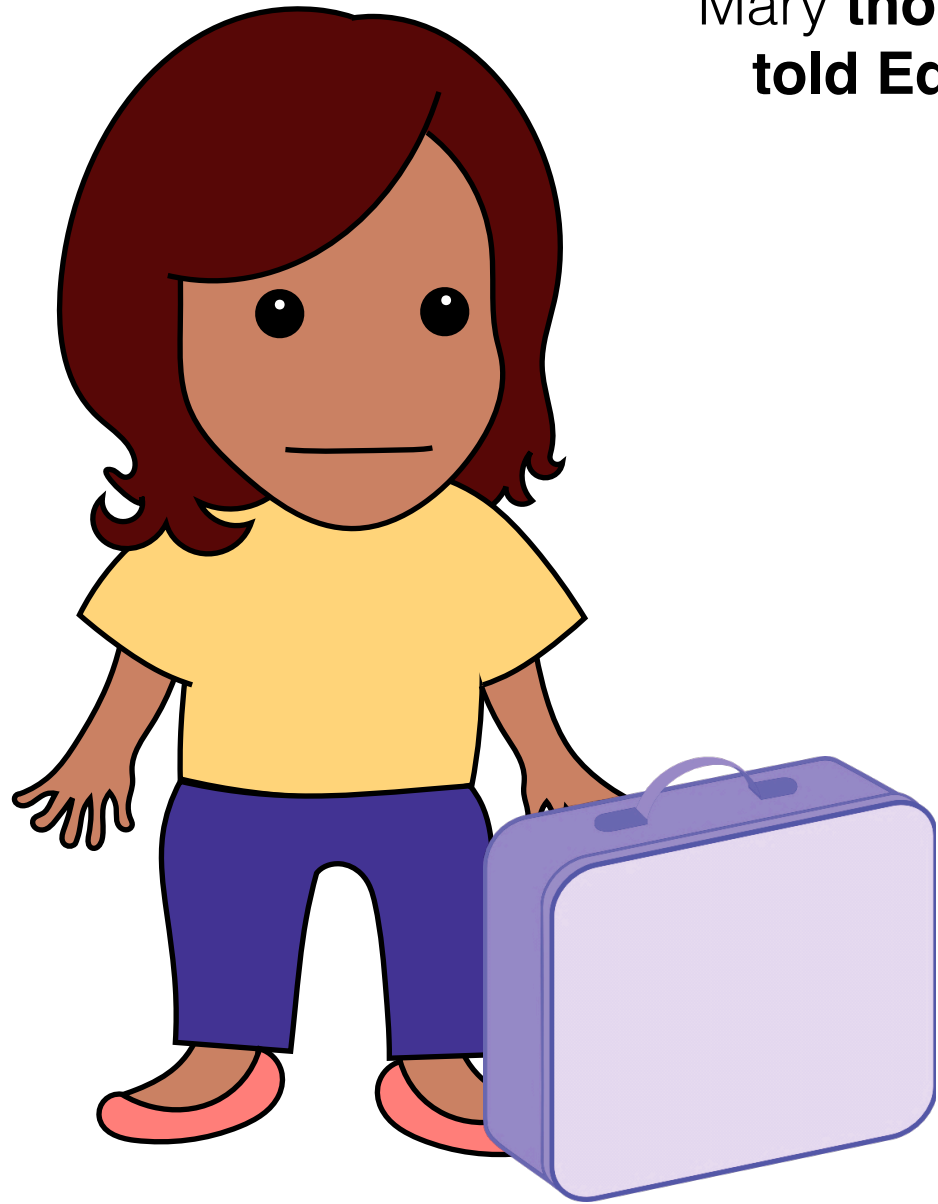

Now, remember these faces? How nice is Mary? Point to a face!

Remember Sally and Mary from our story?
Look, here they are.

Remember, Sally thought Edward's cookie was yucky.
told Edward that his cookie was yucky.
Mary thought Edward's cookie was yucky.
told Edward that his cookie was tasty.

A teacher gave them boxes with snacks inside.
The snack can be really tasty, or really yucky.
But Sally and Mary won't know until they open their boxes!

Sally opened her box and tasted the snack.

Sally says: "It's tasty!"

Mary also opened her box and tasted the snack.

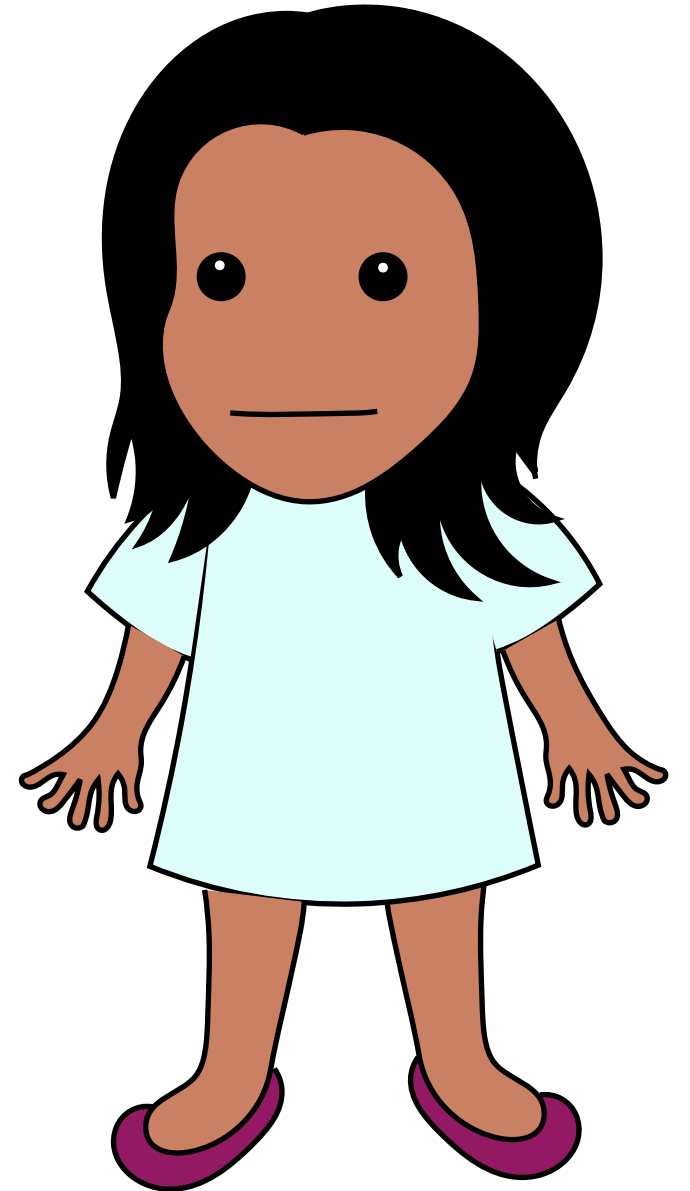

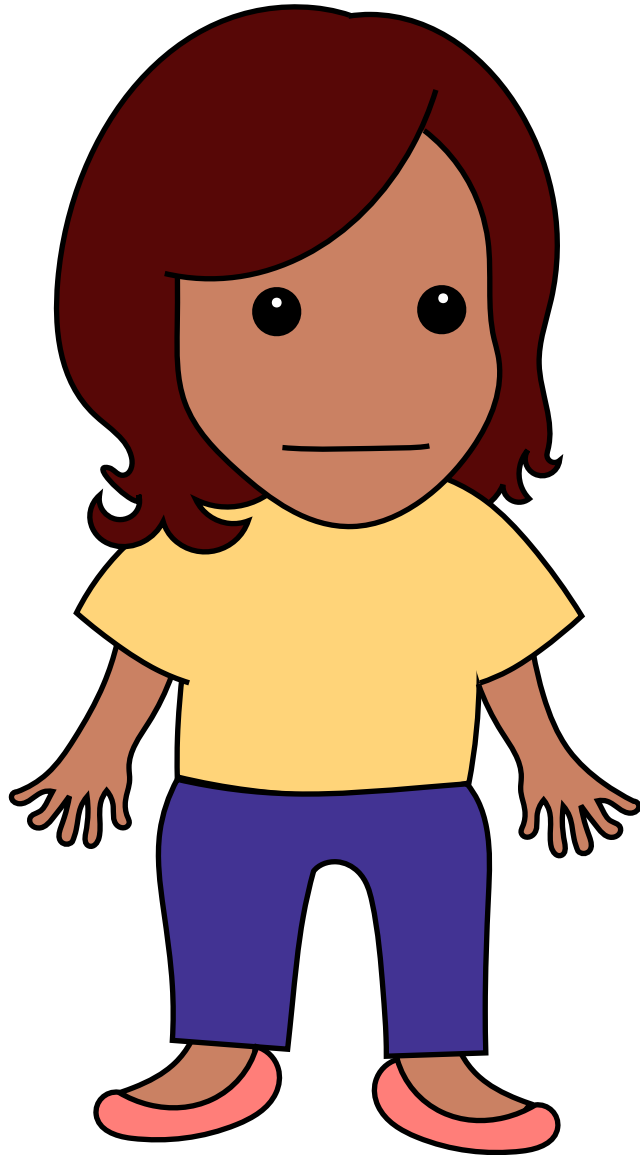

Mary says: "It's tasty!"

Whose snack do you think is more tasty? Sally's or Mary's?

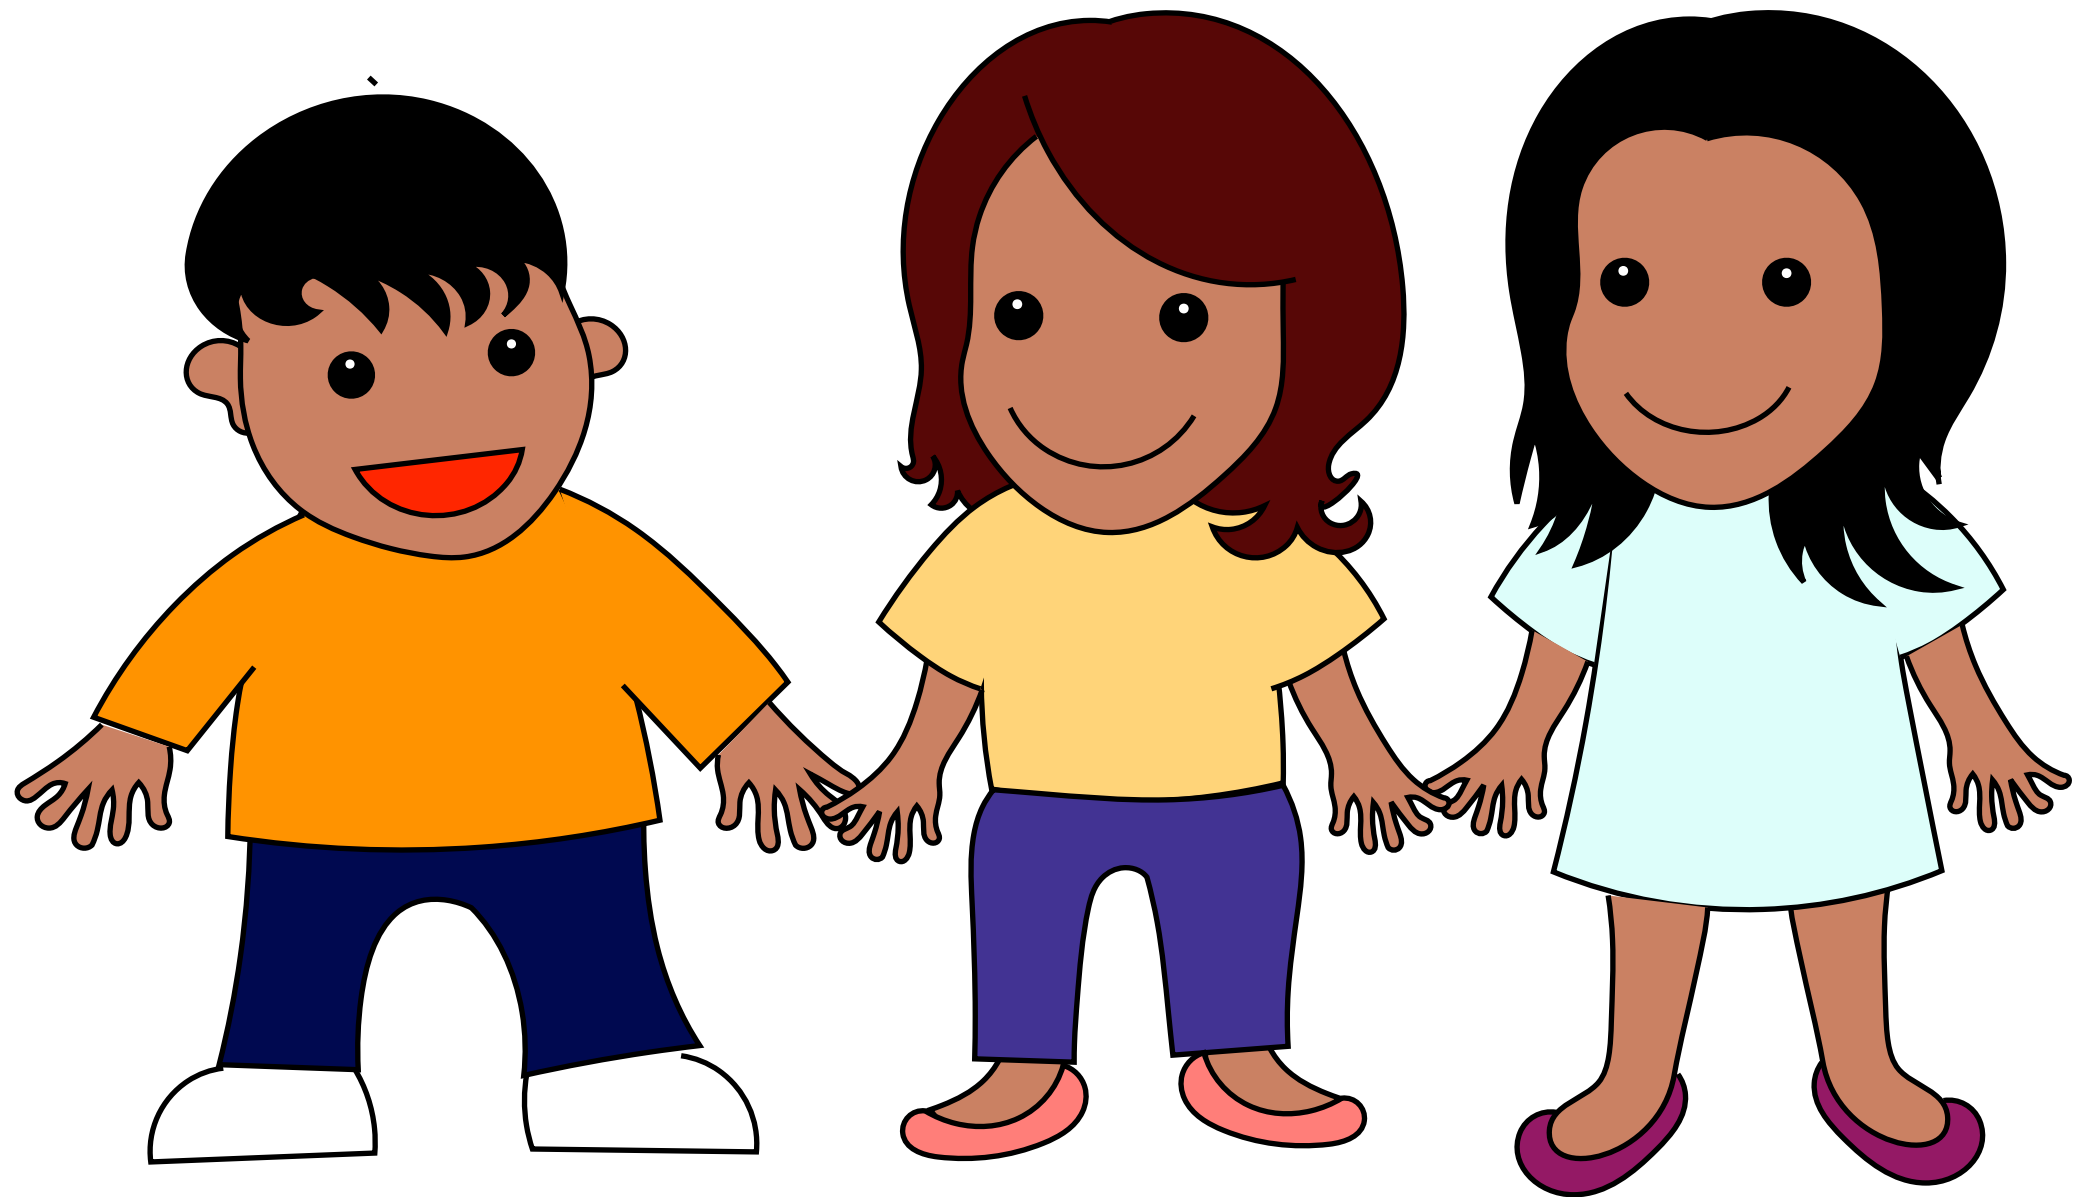

Afterwards, Sally and Mary went outside to play.

Remember, Sally thought Edward's cookie was yucky.
told Edward that his cookie was yucky.
Mary thought Edward's cookie was yucky.
told Edward that his cookie was tasty.

Who do you want to play with more, Sally or Mary? Why?

That's the end of the story about Edward, Sally and Mary!
That was fun!

Remember, this was just a story, Edward is just learning how to bake cookies or he decided to bake cookies differently. And that's okay, because we all do things differently!
So we want to say nice things to each other.
